The 2014 Council Elections in the Mets: introduction

The Metropolitan Districts - the Mets: the councils that run England's biggest cities outside London (and some less well-known areas in between them) - are traditionally Labour's strongest set of councils. The districts are located in six former Metropolitan counties: Greater Manchester, Merseyside, Tyne & Wear, South Yorkshire, West Yorkshire and the West Midlands conurbation.

Each of these councils are elected by thirds with one councillor in every ward up every four years (the fourth year being when county councils are elected, but the Metropolitan county councils were abolished in 1985, so this is now a fallow year). 2014 was a "start" year for this electoral cycle: the other two thirds of these councils will be elected in 2015 and 2016, but it was also the third election for the Mets that has occurred since the party entered opposition nationally in 2010.

That is of significance because it provides a holistic overview of the strength of Labour now the protest votes that saw it lose a score of these, what should be its most reliable councils, throughout the period 2000-2010. During this period Newcastle, Liverpool, Stockport, Oldham, Rochdale and Sheffield fell directly to the Liberal Democrats; Dudley, Walsall, Coventry, North Tyneside and Bury to the Conservatives (to add to Trafford and Solihull); while Labour was also ejected from power almost everywhere else, including the big prizes of Birmingham, Leeds, Bradford and Wolverhampton.

In fact, during the early 2000s it was quicker to produce a list of councils that stayed loyal to Labour. These are the councils almost entirely impervious to the swings of national opinion; where the main political parties other than Labour remain so weak that they struggle to contest all the wards, let alone get themselves elected.

They are (or were, until the UKIP dawn, of which more later) districts like Barnsley, Wigan, Rotherham, Sandwell, Tameside, Sunderland, South Tyneside and Salford - and supreme among them (by some distance) is Knowsley: the hugely deprived borough centred on Kirby and Huyton that lies immediately east of Liverpool.

That is the difference being in opposition nationally makes compared to being in government. Government has been quite disastrous for the Liberal Democrats in terms of their local government base in the Mets especially, because in inner city areas the Conservatives have been eradicated from for decades they were the principal party of protest throughout Labour's time in office.

Not only has that base been eradicated, it is highly unlikely to return given that UKIP - a party with policy positions far closer to their new voters than the Lib Dems ever had (the reason Lib Dems built a presence in local government being hard working pavement politics and simply "not being the other lot" ahead of their policy platform) - is now emerging as the party of protest to Labour.

You would not know it from the number of seats won in these elections but UKIP polled almost twice as many votes as the Liberal Democrats across the Mets, and that despite only contesting 70% of the wards up for election in these councils.

	Lab	Con	LD	UKIP	Oths

Change 2012	- 47	+ 16	- 3	+34	+ 9
Change 2010	+ 37	- 28	- 65	+34	+ 20

In contrast, Labour won 71% of the seats available in the Mets on just 43% of the vote. That sort of share, from these sort of areas, is not especially impressive. But Labour is currently benefiting from both the collapse of the Lib Dems - their principal opponent in so much of this territory - and the concurrent failure of voters to find an alternative to coalesce around.

Even though there were some remarkable performances for UKIP, especially in the West Midlands and South Yorkshire, until they are able to field full slates they will be gifting Labour dozens of seats that would, at least be competitive. That shortcoming, which ranged from zero seats contested in Stockport (contributing to a 54% contest rate in Greater Manchester) to 86% in South Yorkshire and Tyne & Wear.

	Lab	Con	LD	UKIP	Oths
Greater Manchester	45.2	20.7	9.6	14.5	10.1
Merseyside	48.5	14.6	10.1	15.0	12.0
Tyne & Wear	47.9	15.3	10.1	19.6	7.0
West Midlands	40.4	25.3	7.8	19.7	6.8
South Yorkshire	40.0	10.2	8.4	27.8	13.7
West Yorkshire	39.9	23.1	10.1	13.6	13.3

Because UKIP ceded so many seats their headline vote figure in each district is often misleading, just as it was in London. Excluding the wards UKIP did not contest produces a more accurate record of their impact. Caution needs to be taken with this adjusted UKIP share as much as the borough-wide share because the very fact they failed to contest these seats may suggest they would have polled more weakly had they stood. But, by and large, the seats UKIP failed to contest in the Mets are simply because they were a young party insufficiently organised in many of these boroughs rather than because the seats they passed on were demographically unlikely to be supportive (unlike in London).

As the following table shows, on the contested seats measure, UKIP polled over 20% of the vote in two thirds of the Metropolitan districts, and over 30% in a fifth. In Rotherham, if these results are anywhere close to being replicated in the general election Labour will struggle to hold both Rotherham and Rother Valley, though it is virtually impossible for UKIP to take the council to no overall control next year: that would require better results than 2014 in the next two years. Nonetheless a 44% vote share contrasted with Labour's 42% is a remarkable achievement in a council Labour has never lost control of.

Rotherham is not the only council UKIP is a direct problem for Labour in: Dudley will also slip to no overall control in 2015 if UKIP does anything like as well as they did this time around; though here they are hurting the Conservatives in almost equal proportions. They could also help oust Labour in Bradford, more because the party only has a small overall majority there, and prevent them from regaining overall control of Walsall.

And UKIP is on the brink of doing almost as well in Doncaster as it has in Rotherham: it has the vote share but that just didn't translate into many wins in 2014. Doncaster is a much easier council to take to no overall control because there are a dozen or so seats not held by Labour whereas Rotherham is a straight two-way fight.

UKIP is not necessarily replacing the Lib Dems where they were previously strong - the UKIP vote in Liverpool and inner city Birmingham, for example, is unsurprisingly poor whereas the Lib Dems never built a significant presence in towns like Rotherham and Dudley, but they are making inroads in those districts where the Lib Dems had something of a local government presence but never translated that into parliamentary strength. As a party of the right, they also, crucially, have annexed that vote that tended to the BNP and English Democrats - just as they have in the outer east end of London, but in selective Mets that vote has been somewhat larger and established longer.

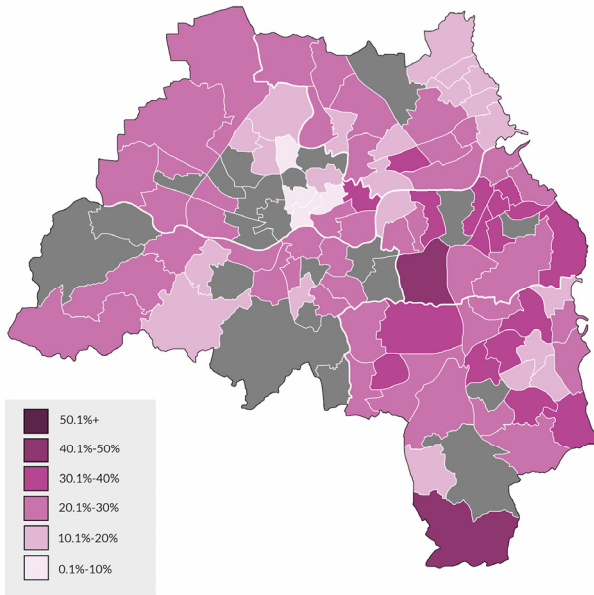

South Yorkshire UKIP vote shares

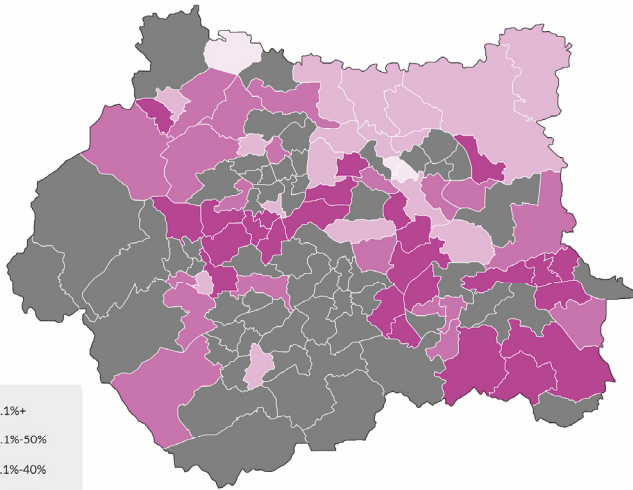

But it's also clearly the case that, in addition to taking significant proportions of protest vote Lib Dem and now homeless (because their parties have all but vanished) BNP/ED supporters, UKIP has harvested traditional Labour and Conservative voters who, until now, had stayed loyal to their respective parties but who have found themselves more estranged from the values of those parties. It's not principally about specific policy, which is why they have traction in both staunchly Labour and traditionally Conservative territory: it's far more about the feeling that the Westminster parties no longer share their values. And because the Mets are predominantly Labour areas, they disproportionately harm Labour in these districts.

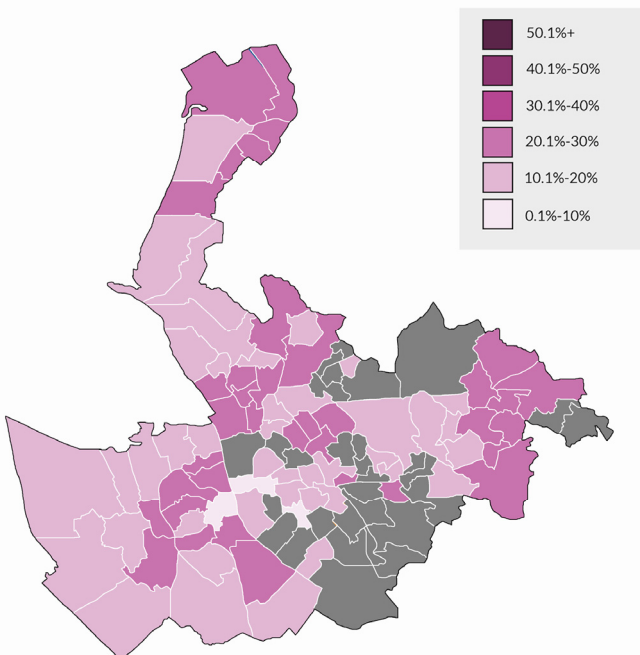

West Midlands UKIP vote shares

Tyne & Wear UKIP vote shares

West Yorkshire UKIP vote shares

Merseyside UKIP vote shares

Another phenomenon that we only saw in one or two wards in last year's county council elections is that UKIP did have the ability, principally in Rotherham but in a few other scattered wards as well, to break through a low ceiling of support that, in many cases, means the party needs a radically divided opposition in order to win.

In Rotherham, however, UKIP polled over 50% in seven wards and over 40% in a further nine, rendering largely irrelevant the vote shares it was up against. But in just eight other wards throughout the rest of the districts did they manage to exceed a 40% share.

It's this "low ceiling" factor that meant, even though they came second across Tyne & Wear with 20%, they could not win a single seat; and even in South Yorkshire where they polled 28% outside of Rotherham they returned just four councillors. If they could pile up votes in some areas and absolutely tank in others - which is exactly what the Liberal Democrats do nowadays - they would have elected several times more councillors than they ended up with. But their vote is remarkably evenly spread. And that may well be why, while UKIP may well be a permanent fixture on the electoral landscape it may be a party of many votes but few seats.

Of the 35 "others" elected in 2014, twelve were Green councillors. In some ways the Green Party is the antithesis of UKIP: it draws its strength from the areas UKIP is weakest: typically university wards, diverse inner city areas and affluent, liberal leaning areas. And just as UKIP has taken the "protest vote" portion of ex-Lib Dem voters, the Greens are managing to Hoover up the radical left-wing section of them: the ones seeking an alternative to Labour further to the left than the party now in coalition nationally with the Conservatives.

The strongest Green group in the Mets can be found in Solihull in the West Midlands, where they now number ten councillors. They also have bullwarks in the Bradford town of Shipley, in the western Leeds ward of Farnley & Wortley, in Liverpool's St Michael's ward, in Sheffield's central ward and in the outer Huddersfield ward of Newsome.

In 2014 the Greens also showed some ability to expand their base where they already have a presence: in Merseyside for example winning not just their long-term Liverpool ward of St Michael's but next-door Greenbank and, much more spectacularly, Birkenhead & Tranmere ward in Wirral. Likewise in Sheffield they captured the third seat in Central ward but also gained the next-door ward of Broomhill. In Leeds the fading of the Lib Dems has given the Greens a shot of creating a brace of wards there by adding Headingley. In Kirklees they can often win the adjoining ward to Newsome: Kirkburton (though not this year) and in Solihull they have spread from two wards in Shirley to the far north of the borough in Chelmsley Wood and Smiths Wood.

But the Greens are far weaker than UKIP: they polled in excess of three times fewer votes and contested barely half the available seats in the Mets. And, of course, the Greens have been around for more than thirty years: this was UKIP's maiden election in most cases.

Such are the big majorities Labour has built up, and because the Mets are elected by thirds, very few of these councils are in play, even in districts that look initially vulnerable. The distortion of annual elections means that the national standings of the political parties are secondary to their comparative strength at this stage of the electoral cycle four years earlier. In other words, Labour could do well enough in the 2015 general election to regain power nationally - and that would obviously be a stark improvement on their 2010 showing. But the relevant comparator for these councils will be 2011, when Labour did very well, so there's a real prospect of the party losing council seats.

Take Walsall for example. Here, Labour is one seat from taking overall control. Yet in both 2012 and 2014 Labour won nine seats in each round, whereas in 2011 - the round of seats up next - they took 12. So, even if Labour repeats its most recent performances the odds are greater that the party will emerge further from an overall majority than they will bridge that tiny gap to an overall majority.

Labour has a better chance of taking overall control of Calderdale where, again, it is just one seat short of power. Should Labour repeat its performances in 2012 and 2014 it will take Calderdale, but in this council almost any result is possible.

The party needs a further three seats to take control of Kirklees: the council covering Huddersfield, Dewsbury and Batley, but this will be challenging given that, even in their best recent year of 2012 they could only take 12 of the seats up in that round. They need 13.

Trafford is going to be another tough nut to crack. Here Labour needs five gains for a majority, though depriving the Tories of an overall majority - an easier, but not necessarily likely achievement - will probably be enough to put them in power with Lib Dem support. Labour has won all the "low hanging fruit" in Trafford and now needs to look to wards like Davyhulme West and Flixton for gains, neither of which they've held - and then only fleetingly - since the mid 1990s.

The Conservatives will be defending Trafford and Solihull, where they are four seats from losing control. On the basis of their last two rounds of performance they look set to lose two seats (both to the Greens) but if they fare worse this could be the second council after Brighton & Hove that the Green Party exercises power in. But for that to happen there would need to be a rainbow coalition encompassing UKIP, Lib Dems and Labour. Therefore Conservative control looks a likelihood, be it in a minority or majority.

Labour is only vulnerable in three councils: Bradford, where three losses will wipe out their majority. If 2014 is the benchmark for next year they will lose two and then recover to a more comfortable position when the Respect seats won in 2012 come around again in 2016.

If they lose four seats in Dudley they will lose control. Again, if 2014 is the benchmark they will lose two, but UKIP ran them close in so many wards that it's easy to imagine them doing much worse.

Finally, an exceptionally grim Labour night would see them lose Wirral, where the loss of six seats will wipe out their majority. This is highly unlikely though: they would need to lose half the seats they will be defending.

The most spectacular amount of Labour losses will probably again come in Rotherham, but unless UKIP can win the majority of seats up for election in this and the next rounds - a distinct possibility - they cannot take control or even remove the Labour majority.

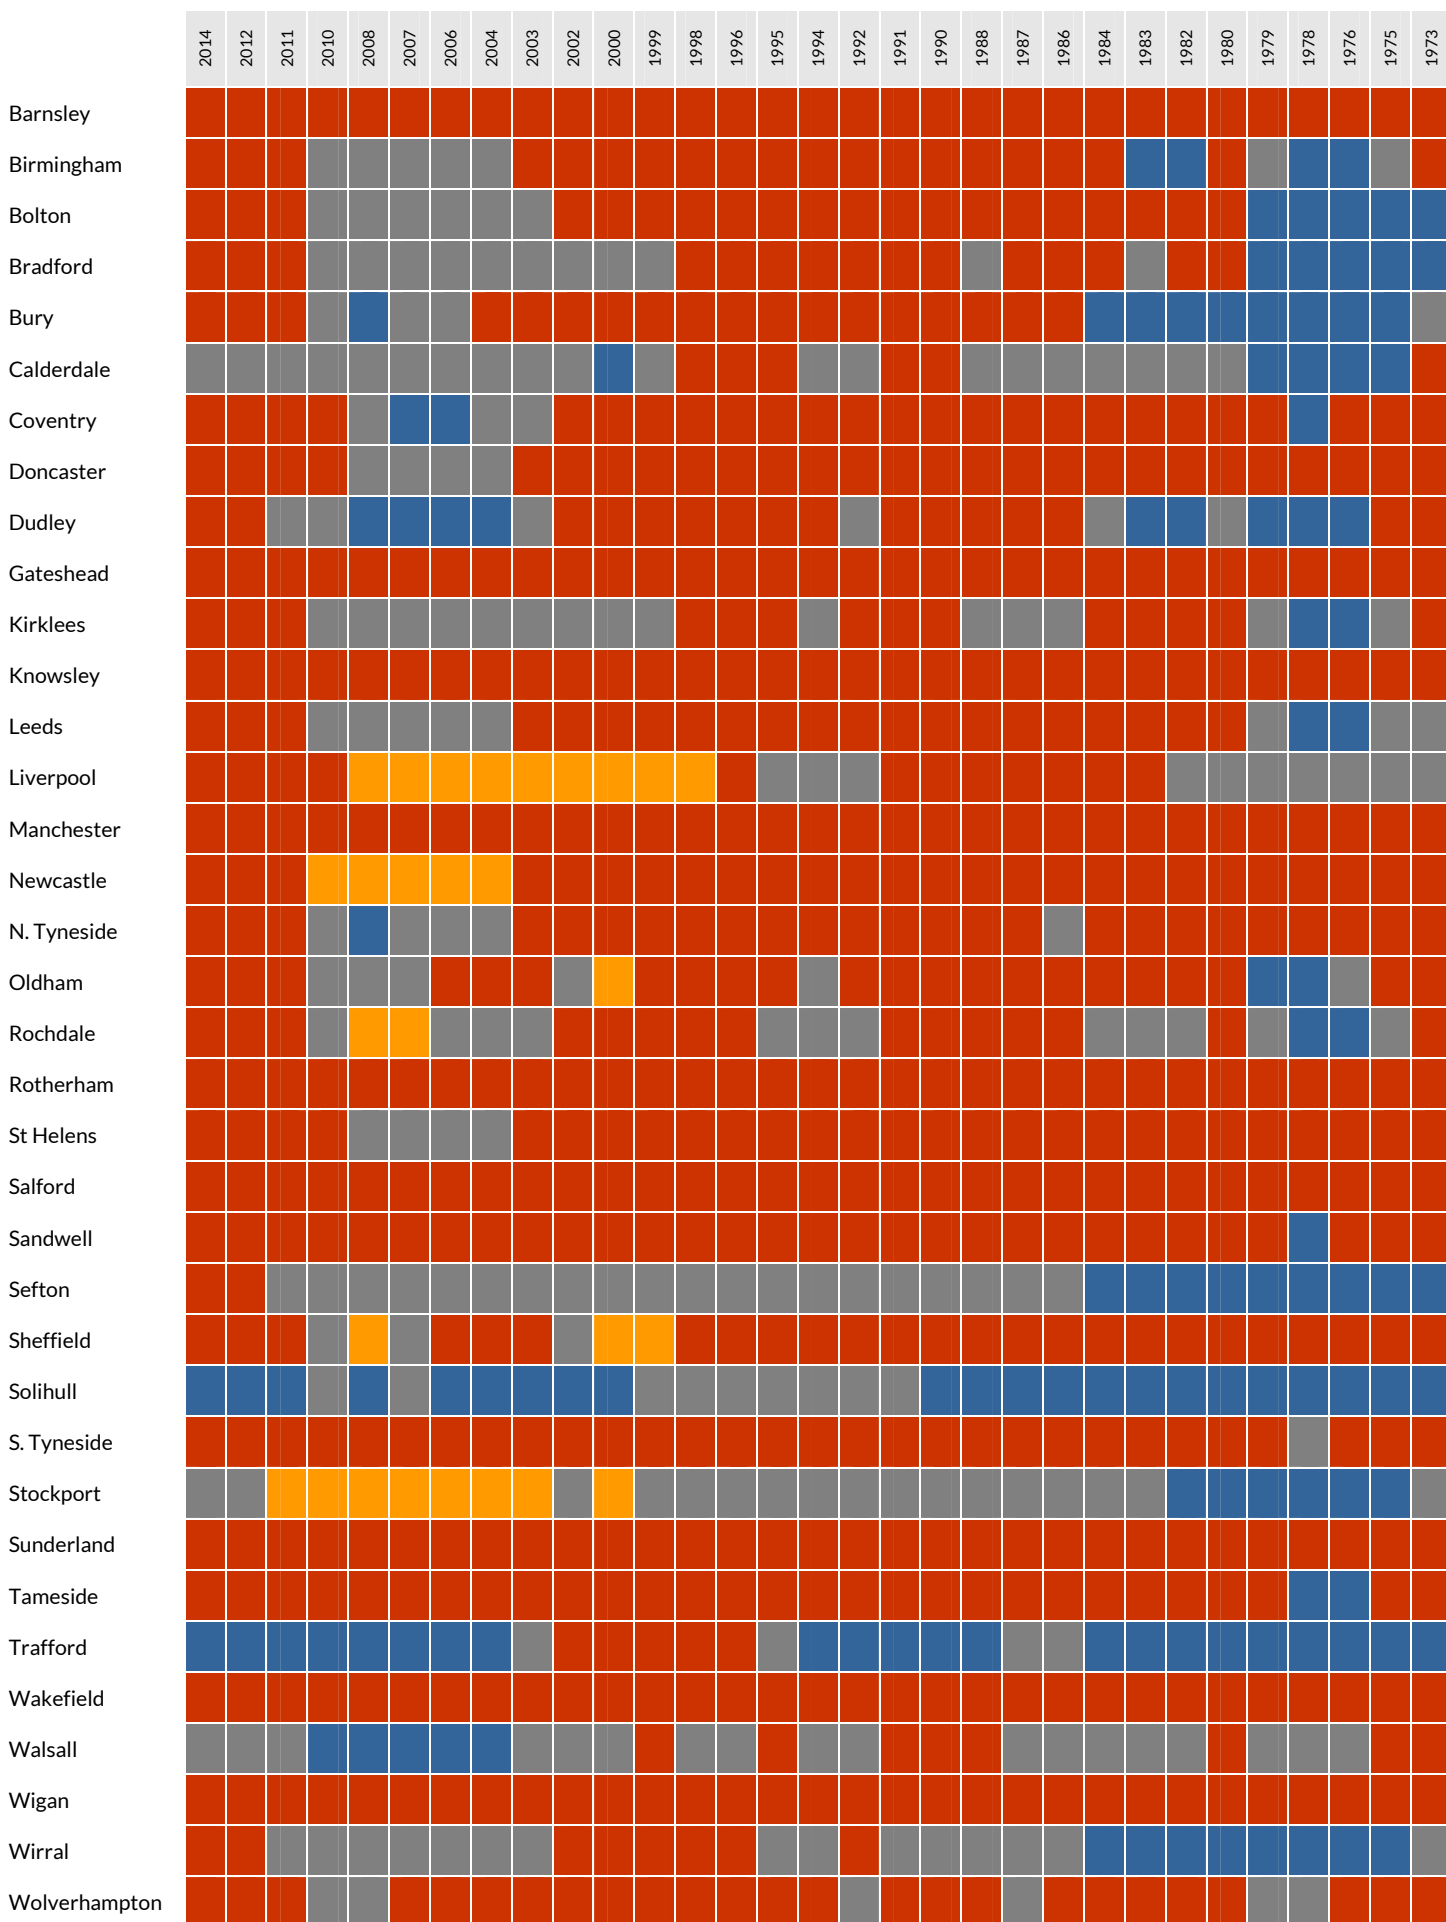

There is one further council currently in no overall control and that is Stockport. Stockport may well be the new Sefton - that is a council that year after year no party is able to gain control of (though Labour has now cracked Sefton) given that the Lib Dems, Labour and Conservatives are all firmly entrenched. Labour needs ten extra seats - and that ain't gonna happen in one go; the Lib Dems five, but they will probably still be on the defensive with a greater priority being their two parliamentary seats in the borough.

All in all, the next round of elections will not produce many headline-grabbing outcomes. But beneath the surface the trends that emerged in the 2014 elections look set to develop - at the very least setting 2016 up as a more turbulent round for Labour, especially if they are back in government by then. UKIP will look to turn votes into far more seats - pushing on towards perhaps one hundred Metropolitan councillors. The Lib Dems will hope that the three cycles of massive losses has loss-proofed their 2015 campaign and that they can begin the process of rebuilding their decimated local government base.

The Conservatives need to start reviving in those suburban areas they have been wiped out of in recent years: places like Crosby in Sefton, the inner suburbs of Leeds, Bradford, Stockport and the Wirral - and wouldn't it be nice for them to get a solitary councillor elected somewhere in Sheffield, Newcastle, Manchester or Liverpool? This remains highly unlikely to say the least but the decline of the Lib Dems has given them at least a modicum of a chance to win back more votes in the affluent suburban wards of these cities.

As for Labour, they go into these elections knowing that it is psephologically impossible for them to lose control of a vast swathe of their Metropolis, and that even losses at the fringes are quite difficult. That is a great position for any party to be in but it belies a weakening in the share of the vote that so many of their seats depend on. There is a point - probably still some way off for Labour - whereupon further declines in their vote will see quite significant chunks of seats fall away. This problem looks more remote than it is because of the collapse of the Lib Dems but uninspired, unmotivated and, in many areas neglected Labour voters are an earthquake waiting to happen to the party.
