The Reform RReformation

An unexpected general election

Prior to her landslide general election victories of 1983 and 1987, Margaret Thatcher used those years' council elections to test her party's popularity before dissolving parliament. In 2024, Rishi Sunak did the exact same thing and, again, the local elections suggested a landslide might be in store. Just not a Conservative one.

It's unlikely that the Prime Minister had been given a sanitised and false set of results by his advisors that somehow suggested winning a general election in July was possible. Rather Tim Shipman in his final book on British politics since the Brexit referendum suggests Sunak had by this point already thrown in the towel and would have called a general election even if not a single Conservative councillor had been elected. This despite there being no need for him to seek a dissolution for another six or so months.

The near-landslide Conservative majority won in 2019 by Boris Johnson had been significantly eroded by defections and by-election defeats, but his dysfunctional, divided and exhausted party still had 139 more MPs than Labour and 44 more than the entire opposition.

Nonetheless, a few days after the 2024 council election results had been declared, Sunak called a general election, having already seen the King to seek a dissolution before presenting it as a fait accompli to his cabinet and then going out for his rain-soaked debacle of a public announcement in front of 10 Downing Street.

This was not a general election campaign that made much impact: it was not a 1992, when voters had seriously considered putting Labour into power but swung away in the last week and returned John Major to government. The electorate had soured on the Conservatives from the autumn of 2021 when Boris Johnson thoroughly messed up the disciplining of former minister Owen Patterson who had been found to have accepted, but not declared, consultancy fees from companies within his constituency in return for lobbying for contracts.

Souring turned to curdling when the Partygate scandal broke in early 2022 and Johnson's repeated failures to own up, explain and sincerely apologise, culminating in police-issued fines for breaches of the Covid regulations Johnson himself had rushed through parliament.

The 2022 council elections were pretty dismal for the Conservatives, appearing even worse on election night where the early-declared losses of the totemic Tory-run London boroughs of Wandsworth and Westminster shaped the narrative. The final London result was a score-draw for Labour: gaining three (Wandsworth, Westminster and Barnet) but also losing three (Croydon, Harrow and Tower Hamlets), but by then the headlines had been written. And while they weren't the sole reason for his ouster, they were a large factor in Johnson being ousted by his own party by the summer.

The Liz Truss interregnum then followed, at which point even the most remote possibility that the Conservatives could win a fifth term of government evaporated. Then, that autumn Rishi Sunak, comfortably defeated in the Conservative leadership election just a few weeks earlier, was imposed on his split, furious and unleadable party by MPs with three years left to pull-off an electoral miracle. Rishi had his strengths but miracle-worker was not among them.

Arguably the election of all three of these Conservative leaders: Johnson, Truss and Sunak - indeed Keir Starmer too - proved that rapidly accelerated political careers do not produce experienced, competent, balanced political leaders with the full skill-set to lead a country, let alone a political party. Compare these here-today, gone-tomorrow flibbertigibbets to the trudging, earned rise to the top by their political forebears: James Callaghan, Shirley Williams, Roy Jenkins, Margaret Thatcher, Tony Benn, Denis Healey, Willie Whitelaw and the like: politicians who gained experience of running big ministries and managing their parties through good times and bad.

Sunak had the technocratic skill to master a policy brief, was by all accounts a decent, intelligent and driven man who had risen to the top without making very many enemies (Johnson and his devotees being the principal but recent exceptions). He reached the top not through Francis Urquhart, House of Cards Machiavellian manoeuvres but from a mix of patronage, personableness and precociousness. Yet Tim Shipman observed that he relatively quickly discovered that, unlike his time at Winchester College and his hugely successful career in the private sector, setting the objective and then working his socks off to get it done did not necessarily lead - in fact very rarely led - to that objective being achieved in politics.

There is no other explanation for him signing off on some exceptionally minimalist but widely publicised "pledges" and then failing to achieve the majority of them. Or even to him choosing as pledges things that weren't in his power to deliver. That was directly the case in respect of controlling inflation when the principal levers for bringing it down (interest rates) rested in the hands of the Bank of England. But it was as true of his pledge to significantly reduce illegal immigration when he lacked the parliamentary votes and political passion to free Britain of the legal shackles that prevented a government (any government) from achieving this goal. In other words, Sunak's great shortcoming was a lack of political smarts: he simply had not been around long enough to master the craft of politics, which is far, far more than simply a technocratic understanding policy.

Those political shortcomings returned again and again throughout the general election campaign, starting with the terrible optics of his bedraggled Downing Street launch, through the bizarre announcement of compulsory national service for all 18 year olds - the first time the Conservatives had even indicated they were considering such a significant policy; the "insider betting" scandal of his aides gambling on the date of the election having already known when it would be called, to the disastrous optics of leaving the D-Day commemorations in France early.

Labour took the decision to let a locked-in general election victory fall into their laps by saying almost nothing about policy. But media abhors a vacuum so in the absence of substance they focussed initially on the debacle of Diane Abbott's readmission to the parliamentary party and whether or not she would be permitted to defend her seat as a Labour candidate (she was, but only after the maximum possible damage for Labour HQ had been extracted from the episode). The rumblings of disquiet from within heavily Muslim constituencies over Labour's position on Israel's action in Gaza also caught media attention, notably Jonathan Ashworth being pursued through the streets of his Leicester South constituency by angry constituents. Despite defending a majority of over 22,000, Ashworth lost his constituency, as went four other Labour seats, to "pro Gaza" Independents.

The most momentous and least focussed upon (at least at the time) aspect of the general election was the rise of Reform UK: Nigel Farage's latest vehicle for mobilising the voices of those who regard the mainstream parties as being two sides of the same politics that both failed and ignored the country. Reform had virtually no electoral record thus far: they had fielded just 322 candidates (12% of the seats available) in the 2024 council elections, winning just two councillors (both in Derby). It took Farage several days into the general election campaign to even commit to standing for parliament again, before he finally decided upon contesting the Essex constituency of Clacton.

Prior to Farage's announcement that he was assuming the leadership of Reform on 3rd June, the party was polling at around 11%, in close competition with the Lib Dems and Greens for that distant third place in the polls. Labour was polling in the mid to high 40%s and the Conservatives in the mid 20s.

Farage's announcement swelled support for Reform by between three and six points, with most polls putting them on around 15%. Towards the end of the campaign, YouGov polling in particular (because it was the pollster contracted by the Times and Sunday Times), but also Survation and a spray of new, untested polling firms were creating sensationalist headlines that Reform was catching, even surpassing the Conservatives - who were struggling to poll even 20%. On 13 June YouGov recorded Reform on 19% and the Conservatives on 18%. The majority of polls gave Labour 40% of the vote or more, while a minority placed them at 37-39%; all giving the party leads in the high double digits, far in excess of what Tony Blair's new Labour won in its 1997 landslide.

In the event the polling failure of 2024 was one of the worst ever. Reform on 14% did not get remotely close to the Conservatives, who ended on 24%. Labour, meanwhile, attracted just 34% of the vote. But it is not the winning party's share that determines a general election majority but the gap between the winner and the runner up, which at 10% broadly replicated their 1997 lead and produced a similarly massive landslide: 411 Labour MPs to 121 Conservatives and an overall parliamentary majority of 174 seats: almost one hundred seats larger than Boris Johnson had achieved for his party in 2019.

Reform UK won five constituencies, all on the eastern side of England where sentiment against the EU and support for UKIP, the Brexit Party and now Reform has always been strongest. Alongside Farage in Clacton, Richard Tice won Boston and Skegness in Lincolnshire, Rupert Lowe won Great Yarmouth in Norfolk, Lee Anderson was re-elected in Ashfield, Nottinghamshire, having defected after being suspended from the Conservatives and, eventually, James McMurdock was declared winner in Basildon South and Thurrock East by a majority of 98 votes.

The loveless landslide

But it was Reform devastating the Conservative vote that handed Labour its massive parliamentary majority, as well as tipping dozens more seats to the Liberal Democrats. Labour under Sir Keir Starmer polled far fewer votes than Jeremy Corbyn in both his narrow loss of 2017 and his near-landslide defeat in 2019. 34% of the vote was a far weaker showing than the 38% Tony Blair had managed in his third, post-Iraq, election win (when Labour's majority had been trimmed to a still healthy 66 seats). The Conservative and Reform vote combined was (just) larger than Labour's.

In other words, while a win is a win and a landslide majority gives a party complete power, this miserable share of the vote was the reason Labour's victory was quickly dubbed the "loveless landslide" or the mandateless majority. It was 2019 Conservative voters abandoning their party either to sit at home (turnout crashed to just 59.8%) or to switch mostly to Reform UK, that delivered constituency after constituency to Labour.

Just 5% of 2019 Conservative voters voted Labour in 2024 meaning the party won back less than half of the Labour voters who switched to the Tories between 2017 and 2019 (11%, source: YouGov). In 1997 16% of 1992 Conservatives switched to new Labour (12% didn't vote and 11% switched to the Lib Dems).

For the first time since the Corn Laws, a schism on the right had delivered a left of centre government.

It is still unclear whether Rishi Sunak expected the result to be quite this bad. Surely he did not because, for all the claims that waiting until the autumn to call the election risked worsening economic conditions, it's hard to see how much worse the result could have been for his party at another juncture.

It also makes no sense that a party that had staked so much of its credibility on belatedly cutting illegal immigration went to the polls before the first flights to Rwanda had taken off - nor being able to get some early statistics from the other Conservative immigration reforms (changes to the minimum income needed to apply for a visa and curbs on the numbers of family members that could accompany visa holders). When theses figures were finally reported by the Office of National Statistics in May 2025, migration in 2024 had halved compared to 2023. And yet that success - such as it was - was announced well into the term of a Labour government. To many it will have looked, entirely falsely, as a Labour achievement.

Even more critically from a purely partisan perspective, had Sunak waited until autumn to call an election it is likely that Nigel Farage would have been in the United States campaigning for his friend Donald Trump to regain the presidency and may well have passed on a further general election bid. Without Farage, Reform would have polled decently but nowhere near as well as it did under his leadership.

It rings far truer that Sunak, tired of leading a party split well beyond any pretence of unity, viscerally loathed by a large section of the electorate, resisted in its agenda by significant chunks of the civil service and its far-left trade unions, with no economic headroom following the epic spending on Covid and subsidised fuel bills, and simply failing to get the results he expected from the work he put in, threw in the towel.

Despite claims that he intended to remain an MP Sunak quickly announced his resignation as leader of his routed party and headed off to California for a long holiday. Thus he plunged the Conservatives into its fourth leadership election in eight years. Despite panicked calls for an "expedited" contest to "steady the ship" the rules were set to run through the summer, past party conference and conclude at the end of October.

Meanwhile, Labour got on with forming a government and governing. Partly because it had won on such a low share, from the outset its "honeymoon" with the public was far less intense and shorter-lived than Tony Blair's had been in 1997. It was also linked to the down-beat, almost pessimistic narrative Labour had spun throughout the general election, playing up the economic difficulties they would inherit and the "tough choices" they would make in power.

The initial decisions of the new government included cancelling the Rwanda deportation plan and its contract to host migrants on the Bibby Stockholm barge in Portland harbour, imposing mandatory house-building plans, agreeing a 22% pay increase settlement with junior doctors to end their long-running strike action, releasing early over 3,000 prisoners to manage prison occupancy levels, rail renationalisation and promising the removal of hereditary peers from the House of Lords.

Labour claimed to have discovered a £22 billion "black hole" in the public finances, though their claims were somewhat questionable when they immediately awarded inflation-busting public sector pay settlements to the trade unions without requiring any improvements in productivity which cost at least half that sum. The Office of Budget Responsibility later asserted that the gap the Conservatives left Labour was £9 billion rather than £22 billion.

The "far right" summer riots

But the first big test for Starmer's government was the sporadic rioting that occurred following the murder by Axel Rudakubana on 29 July of three children at a dance party in Southport. The rioting tended to focus on hotels and hostels housing asylum seekers following the incorrect claim pushed on social media that Rudakubana was an illegal immigrant and a Muslim. As such they were branded "far right" by the government even though most of the rioters wouldn't have been able to explain what a political spectrum was, let alone where they figured within it.

In fact Rudakubana was the son of Christian migrants from Rwanda granted leave to remain, but the implication that, had the facts been known by every single rioter the troubles would not have happened is nonsense. There was simply too much pent up rage at broken promises over decades from Labour and Conservatives on immigration.

In this light, whether Rudakubana was a direct immigrant or the son of immigrants given leave to remain is pure sophistry. Perhaps mosques and Islamic centres may have been spared the violence but the horror of his appalling crimes was entangled with the wider issue that many British citizens believed too many immigrants had been allowed into the country without any mandate so to do.

The underlying issue with this midsummer rioting was the vast surge in asylum seekers, linked to the huge delays in processing claims and the difficulties the Home Office was having housing them. This led to hotels and hostels being block-booked by the government at the cost of millions of pounds a day, occasionally at the expense of holidaymakers unable to find anywhere to stay as a result, at least within their budget. Of course, the vast majority of those for whom immigration was a concern did not riot, or incite rioting, or share social media propaganda about it, accurate or not.

But the government clamped down rapidly on those involved in the rioting, including those accused of inciting the riots or racial hatred online. This action commanded widespread public and media approval but it created the somewhat challenging narrative of a Labour government releasing violent offenders from prison sentences early only to fill their vacated cells with social media warriors who had said appalling, hate-filled and factually wrong things but were quantifiably less bad than a wife-beater, an armed burglar or a repeat-offending yob.

Inevitably, courts ended up sentencing people who had committed broadly similar offences differently and sometimes it appeared as though left-wing activists accused of offences including violence, mass public disruption and vandalism were being released on licence while those dubbed "far right" received heavier sentences. Where was the proportionality between BBC news reader Huw Edwards, spared jail despite being found guilty of sexual offences against an under-age boy, and the wife of a Conservative councillor sentenced to almost three years in prison for a hideous tweet which she soon regretted and deleted?

And while those involved in the rioting received rapid sentencing, a Labour councillor on a counter protest who called for rioters to have their "throats' slit" - as outrageous and provocative an incitement as anyone calling for an asylum seeker's hostel to be firebombed - walked free after being found not guilty at a jury trial.

Coupled to what has subsequently been revealed to be something of a conspiracy of silence by the authorities around Rudakubana's processing through the system which helped create the vacuum in which the false claims about him sprung to life, and several of the early-release prisoners reoffending almost immediately, allegations of a two-tier criminal justice system began doing the rounds. Eventually they connected with the Prime Minister and "Two Tier Keir" became a catchy nickname for the Prime Minister, despite his efforts to be the strict, disciplinarian former prosecutor.

Labour's benefits backlash

Three huge controversies emerged from Chancellor Rachel Reeves' claims about having to cut to balance the books.

First, the government refused to repeal the so-called Two Child Benefit Cap, whereby families on welfare only received benefits linked to their children's upbringing for the first two kids. This had been a policy introduced by George Osborne, in part to slow the expansion of the welfare state but also to appeal to those families ineligible for benefits who had to limit the number of children they had to what they could afford. Critics of the policy blamed it for an upswing in child poverty and Labour had routinely voted to reverse the policy while in opposition. Seven left-wing Labour MPs lost the party whip by voting for an SNP motion calling for the removal of this benefits cap.

Labour also announced it was ending the Winter Fuel Allowance for pensioners whose income was greater than the level needed to qualify for pension credits - the vast majority. Winter Fuel Allowance had been introduced by Gordon Brown as a universal benefit for pensioners as chancellor to replace a convoluted system of cold weather payments to benefits recipients whereby temperatures had to be below a threshold for a set number of days before it was triggered. Because it was universal, affluent as well as needy pensioners received it and newspaper letters pages often printed letters from older readers telling readers how they used it for presents or charity donations or on expenditure other than fuel.

Why Labour only felt pensioners in fuel poverty needed the allowance, or why they couldn't have seen to it that, as with the Energy Bills Support Scheme Rishi Sunak organised following the surge in fuel costs following Russia's invasion of Ukraine, it was paid direct to each household's energy supplier, or why it couldn't simply have been rolled into the state pension rather than a separate benefit are all mysteries.

But Labour soon discovered that withdrawing a benefit is very much harder than not introducing it in the first place. There was a ferocious backlash: the first real opportunity Labour had given the Conservative-supporting tabloids to attack it; pensioners just above the threshold but hardly affluent worrying about how they'd cope with winter approaching; consumer groups publishing scare stories of how many might die, and - yet again - Labour having the public relations challenge of withdrawing benefits from British citizens who had "paid into the system all their lives" while tens of thousands of migrants were housed, clothed, given funds and granted free access to a host of services.

The third controversy was Labour's decision not to compensate, despite a ruling by the Parliamentary Ombudsman that they should, and promises made before they were in government that they would, the so-called WASPI women. These were women who claimed to have been given insufficient notice of the government's intent to equalise the state pension age with men, and therefore not being able to make sufficient adjustments to how long they worked or how much they saved to accommodate these changes.

Some might argue that if changes widely publicised in the news for years passed by the people whose attention should most have been caught by this publicity then that was a problem of their own making. But among an electorate that had got into the habit of asking not what it could do for the country but what the country could do for it, this was perceived - especially among the eternal crusaders of the left - as a grievous social injustice that needed to be rectified by throwing billions of taxpayers' money at it.

Later on the government decided to keep punching its own wound by talking about reforming an even newer benefit: Personal Independence Payments (PIP) designed to fund specific needs for disabled claimants, applications for which had exploded since the Conservatives introduced it. Just as with Winter Fuel Payments and WASPI, the lobbyists and PR factories employed by the vested interests championing this payment leapt into action playing up emotive scenarios of how lost PIP would devastate the lives of those who had managed to exist without it before 2013, and pressuring the huge cohort of Labour backbenchers who, of course, "didn't come into politics to cut benefits" with the loss of their seats.

The first Labour Budget, held on 30th October, raised taxes by £40 billion including a big increase in employer National Insurance contributions and an extension of the freeze on Income Tax thresholds, the consequence of which is to draw more taxpayers into paying higher rate Income Tax as their pay increases, even if only by inflation. The long-heralded charging of VAT on public school fees was enacted. Some of the largest protests, even though it was a relatively minor tax grab in the scheme of things, protested the ending of Inheritance Tax exemptions for agricultural property: a tax on farming families.

Some of the services benefiting from this extra tax income included £22 billion extra for the NHS, principally targeted at clearing backlogs, £6.5 billion extra for schools, £5 billion for new affordable housing, £2.5 billion extra for defence, £3.4 billion to increase the Warm Homes Fund, £3 billion more to support Ukraine and £550 million to help fix potholed roads.

The Institute for Public Policy Research announced that this budget would take taxation to its highest level since the Second World War and Rachel Reeves declared - possibly foolishly - that this would be a once-in-a-parliament Budget: essentially that this was the one and only significant tax-raising fiscal event.

The media questioned whether the Budget stuck to, if not the letter then at least the spirit of Labour's manifesto pledge not to increase taxes on "workers" given that while employees were not paying the new higher National Insurance contributions that had been levied on their employers, the indirect outcome would be fewer jobs and lower (if any) pay increases. Workers would also pay constantly increasing Council Tax and be captured by fiscal drag in their payslips.

Resignations

Inevitably there were also scandals involving politicians, though for a change Labour ones instead of Conservatives.

Following her ousting as Prime Minister of Bangladesh, allegations emerged about perks directed by Sheikh Hasina to her niece, the Labour MP and government minister Tulip Siddique. She became the first minister to resign from the government. Labour MP for Ilford South and former leader of Redbridge Council Jas Athwal was cited as being the owner of several rental properties in a poor state of repair. Transport Secretary Louise Haigh resigned having been revealed as having a criminal record for fraudulently reporting the theft of an i-Pad. The newly-appointed Labour leader in Wales, Vaughan Gething, was forced out after three members of his cabinet resigned and it becoming evident he lacked the votes to survive a confidence motion. He was duly replaced by Eluned Morgan.

A stream of stories about mis-declared, or not declared at all, gifts to Labour politicians including clothing, free tickets for football matches and the use of properties owned by millionaire party donors hit the media, involving the Prime Minister, Deputy Prime Minister and Chancellor of the Exchequer, among many others. For a party that had created a big fuss about Boris Johnson soliciting funds from a party donor to redecorate his flat in Downing Street back in 2021, this looked not just like sleaze but hypocrisy. Voters could rightly ask why Keir Starmer, with his six figure prime ministerial salary, received free Arsenal tickets when they never would. Already semi-detached Canterbury Labour MP Rosie Duffield because of her gender-critical views, resigned from the parliamentary party over this "sleaze, nepotism and avarice".

Sue Gray, the civil servant who had investigated Boris Johnson, Rishi Sunak and others for their Partygate antics and had shortly afterwards resigned to become Sir Keir's chief of staff, resigned from government after losing a battle for controlling access to the Prime Minister with Morgan McSweeney, who had headed the Labour leader's political office in opposition. This relatively minor story was given legs by Gray's controversial role investigating Conservative politicians before switching to a senior Labour Party post and then declining to accept the consolation prize of becoming the Prime Minister's "envoy" to the nations and regions. She was later appointed to the House of Lords.

Annelise Dodds, the International Development and Equalities minister chose to leave the government rather than vote through cuts to the international development budget that were made to bolster defence spending, though her departure coincided with the Supreme Court ruling clarifying that references to women within the Equality Act should be interpreted to mean biological women, not trans women (biological men). As one of the party's most outspoken "trans allies" that would not have been something Dodds would wish to front for the government either.

Most seriously, Runcorn and Helsby MP was charged and later convicted after pleading guilty, to assaulting a constituent late at night after a drinking session. CCTV video of the attack was widely broadcast. This led to the first by-election of the parliament, though not held until 1 May 2025, which Labour lost to Reform by six votes.

Cancelling local elections

Labour also proved a little tin-eared when they announced that their wish to reorganise local government in England, principally abolishing two-tier local government (the county-plus-district council model, where it still survived) complemented by more directly-elected regional mayors, would mean the postponement of elections in those counties that wished to be in the vanguard of the reforms.

In the event eleven counties applied to have their elections postponed and the government approved postponement in eight: East Sussex, Essex, Hampshire, Isle of Wight, Norfolk, Suffolk, Surrey and West Sussex, plus Thurrock which was due to hold out-of-turn all-out elections this year following boundary changes. Most of these counties would be expected to produce substantial Reform UK votes: notably Essex and Norfolk; though the Liberal Democrats would have had a high chance of gaining Surrey given their surge in this Remain-voting home county at the general election. This gave Nigel Farage another victimhood card to play, declaring "democracy cancelled" for millions of voters and claiming Labour was too afraid to face the voters.

In fact the county councils stage of the electoral cycle is by far Labour's weakest, the party being almost wiped out when these seats were last contested in 2021. By far the biggest beneficiaries of Labour's postponement of the elections in these counties were the Conservatives. Knowing now how the elections went, had everywhere that was expected to be up for election on 1st May actually voted, another terrible election night for the Conservatives might have transformed into an unsurvivable one for the party leadership, even though almost none of the blame stemmed from anything the party had done since November 2024.

Sixth Tory leader in a decade

On which subject, at the end of October Kemi Badenoch was elected Conservative Party leader, the fourth female leader of her party (though why this is quite so marvellous a feat when two of her predecessors were epic failures in the job remains to be seen), the first leader of African descent and the second in succession to come from Britain's minority ethnic communities. This contrasted with the pale, male and stale knighted leaders of the Labour and Liberal Democrat parties.

In the period since the general election the Conservatives had been performing fairly strongly in council by-elections. In part this success was due to the party suffering three very poor council election cycles in 2022, 2023 and 2024 so having many fewer seats to defend and being able to rebound somewhat now that they were no longer in government, though still deeply unpopular. By-elections during this period were also characterised by very low turnout, making it somewhat easier for the more motivated supporters of the Conservatives to inflict defeats on unmotivated Labour and, to a lesser extent, Liberal Democrat supporters. Between October and December the Conservatives gained twenty council seats with very little evidence of Reform making inroads, though still only sporadically actually contesting by-elections.

These improved by-election performances did not equate to any significant Conservative recovery in national polls, albeit that publication of polls dramatically slowed following pollsters' almost uniformly dreadful performance at the general election.

The big self-inflicted wounds of unpopular welfare cuts and massive tax rises; the unceasing surge of immigrants crossing the channel on small boats; the failure of the government to reduce inflation, cut energy bills and grow the economy; and the free gift scandal damaged Labour, now down below 30% in voting intentions, though still narrowly ahead of the Conservatives.

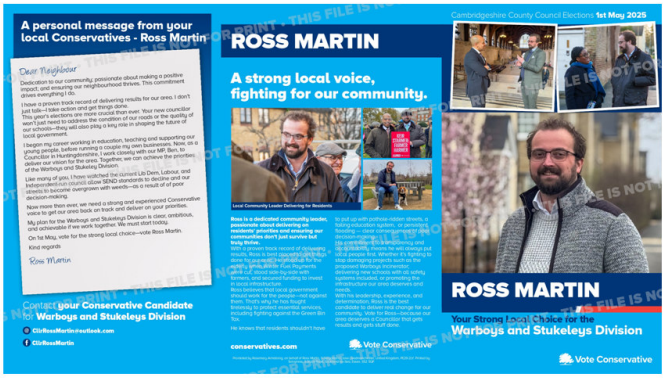

Reform starts taking Labour votes

The beneficiary of Labour's decline was almost entirely Reform UK. The problem now was the credibility of poll findings. Because several of the pollsters did not appear to have conducted much of an inquest into their flawed general election modelling it looked highly questionable that they were right back announcing the sort of Reform shares they had so grossly overstated prior to the general election, especially without any big inflammatory issues for the government in the period Reform had begun climbing again. That said, even if they were wrong about Reform's precise level of support, as long as the pollsters' methodology remained the same they should still be able to detect fluctuations: rises and falls.

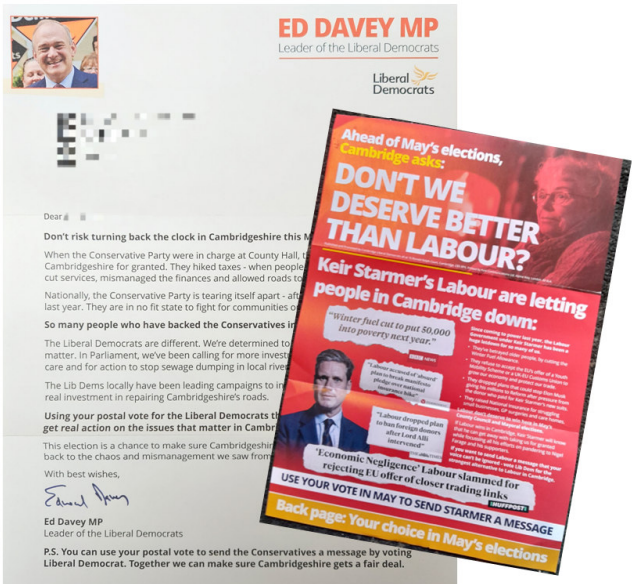

Of the forty voting intention polls conducted between the general election and 1st December 2024, only twelve gave Reform UK a share of 20% or more. Of the eleven polls conducted in December, only one placed them lower than 20%. Of the ninety six polls conducted between January 2025 and the council elections on 1st May just one - certainly a rogue - had Reform below 20%. Fifty-one gave Reform at least 25% of the vote, and forty-seven had Reform outpolling both the Conservatives and Labour.

As a footnote, of the eighteen polls conducted since the local elections, none has Reform lower than 25%, eight have them polling 30% or higher and every one has had them outpolling the government and official opposition. Furthermore, of those eighteen post-May 1st polls, fourteen have the Conservatives below 20% and just five have Labour at 25% or higher. Whether or not these polling trends continue throughout 2025 and into 2026 will be the subject of the next local election results book.

VOTE MEBYON KERNOW 1ST MAY ABOUT ME
Mael is standing for Mebyon Kernow, a political party based here in Cornwall. We want to win a better deal for all the people. MK has no political masters in Westminster to please and we believe that local people know what is best for Cornwall.
Mael is a senior transport planner and father of one, who has lived for a decade in Cornwall. He has also more than a decade of experience working for local councils (including Cornwall Council Transport service), the maritime industry and private engineering firms.
Mael is committed or leading in various community projects and currently serving as a Penryn Town Councillor.
"As a Cornwall Councillor I will listen to you and voice your concerns and asks at the Council. I am deeply committed to keep Cornwall whole, out of any 'Devonwall' project that would drown your voice. I strive to bring back power and funding to our community, so Cornwall can decide for itself. Onen hag Oll!"

So Reform's timeline is a series of increments. First there was its regeneration from The Brexit Party immediately after the 2019 general election into a fringe anti-vaccination, conspiracy theory peddling party on the margins, attracting little more than 5% of the vote.

It then became a vessel for Boris-supporting, despairing conservatives outraged at his ousting and the failure of their party to govern as Conservatives to compete with the smaller progressive parties just below 10% in the polls.

Then came the general election, Nigel Farage's resumption at the helm and the party's polling surge which, even though largely imagined by the pollsters, took them to nearly 15% on polling day - almost all of that share coming from the Conservatives.

Then, as Labour rapidly lost such popularity as it had at the general election, Reform was able to advance past the 20% barrier in the polls, catching the stuck-in-a-rut Conservatives but with almost all of this new support coming from Labour - specifically 2024 Labour voters in the Midlands and North.

Whether or not we are now in a fifth phase of Reform advancement following the local elections, sucking further support from Labour and the Conservatives equally, it is too early to say.

An example of how Reform's advance switched principally from annexing Conservative support to attracting Labour voters can be seen in the Hertfordshire division of Bedwell. A by-election occurred in this division at the end of August 2024 following the appointment of Baroness Taylor of Stevenage, also a county councillor, as a government minister. At that by-election, when voters were still giving Labour the benefit of being new to government the party easily held the seat: Ellie Plater winning 962 votes to the Conservatives' 470 and Reform's 352. Labour's vote share was down just 0.6 of a percentage point while the Tories dropped 11.7 - reflective of the change in electoral fortunes since the 2021 county council elections.

Fast forward to 1st May and this division produced a radically different result. This time Reform's Peter Colley won with 1,196, the by-election victor Ellie Plater polled 853 (a Labour drop of nineteen percentage points compared to 2021) and the Conservatives managed 422 (down more than twenty points). That's a Labour to Reform swing of 20.6%: not from 2021 but from that by-election just eight months earlier.

Nominations

One of Kemi Badenoch's less wise media forays upon being elected Conservative leader was to dispute Nigel Farage's claim that Reform UK's membership had surpassed the last published number for the Tories. Frankly who cares? It's not exactly news that Conservative membership had been pretty dismal for years, and whether or not Farage had recruited more it is hardly a meaningful indicator of anything.

Very much more significant, electorally, was that Reform managed to nominate more candidates (1,630) than the Conservatives (1,596), Labour (1,543), the Lib Dems (1,397) and the Greens (1,184). Just 24 seats lacked a Reform candidate.

This breadth of candidacy was a sensation. Adam's First Rule of Elections is "You Cannot Win If You Do Not Stand". As mentioned earlier, at the 2024 council elections Reform UK fielded candidates in just 12% of the seats. In 2013, the most successful round of elections for UKIP, they contested 77% of the seats. In Cornwall, Labour - which had won four of the six parliamentary seats in the county ten months earlier - fielded 63 council candidates while Reform, which hadn't exactly shone brightly there at the general election, fielded a full slate of 87. In Durham, which had returned four Conservative MPs at the 2019 general election and 24 councillors in 2021, there were 73 Tory council candidates and 97 Reform candidates - one shy of the total seats there.

This was an unprecedented advance for a new party, albeit one that could trace its lineage back a couple of decades to the founding of UKIP. To find anything equivalent you have to go back to the creation of the SDP-Liberal Alliance and the breakthrough they made in 1982.

Even Labour took its time emerging as a fully fledged party in local government. For example, it first contested some seats in borough elections in London in 1903 but it was not until 1919 that it fielded candidates in nearly every ward (and then that was only the former London County Council area, not what is today called Greater London).

Even more significantly, Reform proved itself as a truly national party, unlike UKIP (and unlike the Alliance in the eighties, at least for a while). In Northumberland in 2013, UKIP was only able to field 21 candidates for 62 council seats. There were only 62 UKIP candidates for 83 seats in Lancashire, 60 (77) in Lincolnshire, 22 (62) in Warwickshire and 27 in Durham (120). From Cornwall to Northumberland, and from Lancashire to Kent, Reform could actually claim to be more of a nation-wide party than Labour or Conservatives based on their near-complete field of candidates.

Simply put, in previous years whatever the level of support Reform was registering in the polls, it could not be realised in council elections because there would often not be a Reform candidate to vote for. Just by giving voters the opportunity to pick them in the polling booth they gave themselves a chance of electoral success they had never before come close to achieving.

Expectations

Normally when parties brief the media as to their expectations of results, the name of the game is either to damp down the number of seats they are expecting to gain (if the elections are looking good) or dramatically overstate how bad things are going to be (if they're heading for a rout) in order to be able to spin slightly less apocalyptic losses as, in fact, a success.

When Kemi Badenoch warned her party they could lose every council they were defending, either this was path of the course and she didn't really expect things to be quite so bad, or it was an example of a leader known for being blunt and outspoken simply telling it like it was for her party. Surely in their strongest councils, entrenched cycle after cycle, the Conservatives could not lose everything? Leicestershire? Wiltshire? Worcestershire? These were counties which still returned a majority of Conservative MPs even in 2025.

The Liberal Democrats still have not recovered their local election strength that we eradicated during their years in coalition with the Conservatives nationally, between 2010 and 2015. Their reach has also been heavily realigned following the 2016 EU referendum: they remain very much weaker than they previously were in most Leave-voting areas, but have consolidated and even advanced (a lot) in the many fewer Remain-voting areas beyond London (where Labour is still the go-to party for most Remainer Londoners, apart from in south west London).

It was clear from the general election (and parliamentary by-elections in the previous term) where the Lib Dems might do well and in the sense that this party is still small in the sense of resource allocation, albeit with some of the most fiercely busy grass-roots activists, this helped them focus their resources. Nonetheless, the party may have overpromised in claiming they could replace the Conservatives as the second party of local government (behind Labour). Nonetheless, the Lib Dem targets were clear: Cambridgeshire, Oxfordshire, Gloucestershire, Shropshire, Cornwall and Devon.

The Greens promised another year of advance even though all four areas in which they won parliamentary seats last year were not up for election (Bristol was in the sense that it was electing a regional mayor as part of a wider area that includes South Gloucestershire and Bath & North East Somerset).

The Green Party has a dilemma following Labour's election insofar as its advances over the past few years have principally been in Conservative districts among Conservative voters, pulling off spectacular advances in divisions with little previous record of Green promise.

Their progress in inner city Labour areas has been much slower albeit there are occasional exceptions to that rule. With the Conservatives now in opposition and Labour making the decisions alienating some of its base (particularly the left wing of that base), should the party go after those left-leaning voters with a more radical message focussing on social justice, equality, redistribution and "welfare not warfare", stick with its essentially Zac Goldsmith-esque appeal to environmentally conscious but hardly revolutionary liberal conservatives, or attempt to ride both horses at the same time, potentially falling off both?

This debate has been the fulcrum of the Green Party leadership contest that began not long after this year's council elections with left-wing London Assembly member Zac Polanski arguing strongly for the more aggressively radical position and incumbent leader Adrian Ramsay, now MP for the rural East Anglia (and historically strongly Conservative) constituency of Waveney Valley arguing for a continuity position which, after all, had just delivered the Greens their best ever general election result.

In these elections however, with the Conservatives holding the vast majority of county council seats, an aggressively "progressive" Green message would be less likely to deliver the steady-as-she-goes progress the party was briefing would occur.

As for Labour many activists were unconvinced that Reform was quite the threat to them that it turned out to be. After all, in the general election ten months earlier it had been to Labour the voters turned in all those swing marginal seats in Kent and Staffordshire and Lancashire and Nottinghamshire, reversing all those Boris Johnson "red wall" gains of 2019. After all, from their position on the left bank of British politics, Reform was a far-right, racist party that had to date inflicted catastrophic damage on the Tories, facilitating Labour gains on shares of the vote they otherwise would not have won with. The growing dislocation between how Labour activists view politics and how their traditional voter base does is another critical feature of politics since at least 2010.

When the website Electoral Calculus published a pre-council election MRP poll forecasting the result, which applied their model to council seats for the first time, there was widespread derision among Labour supporters that it was predicting just six county councillors in, for example, Staffordshire - up from just four in 2021. How on earth could it be credible that Labour, which now represented all bar three Staffordshire constituencies (including Lichfield, which even Tony Blair hadn't been able to win in 1997), could end up not gaining significantly, especially with the Tories in the doldrums and Reform taking their votes? It was ridiculous: the product of a website more interested in grabbing headlines for its dodgy paid-for services than producing credible electoral insights.

And, indeed, the Electoral Calculus MRP did get the Staffordshire result wrong. Labour only managed to win two county council divisions instead of the forecast six, as well as grossly overestimating the number of Conservative councillors likely to hold on.

MRPs can get general election forecasts wrong: local election MRPs are even more difficult because there are much stronger votes for independents and localist parties, the main parties may not contest every division or ward, and quite a few people vote differently in local elections to generals. And this MRP was wrong, but only in understating the Reform surge. In terms of the broad direction of travel this round of elections was headed in, it deserves plaudits and perhaps we shouldn't expect any more of any poll or MRP than that.

Anyhow, the scepticism voiced by Labour supporters about that MRP was typical about how the party more widely envisaged these elections going: essentially a re-run of the general election. At very least Labour could expect a significantly improved result in those red wall counties it tanked in both in the 2019 general election and 2021 local elections. Reform would cannibalise the Conservatives and Labour would squeeze through the middle, picking up seats even if its vote share was even weaker than in 2025 at the general election. The party was, however, careful not to set any benchmarks - attempting an enigmatic neutrality and allowing actual votes in ballot boxes to do the spinning for them.

The result

The ballot boxes did indeed do the spinning - just not in the way Labour had hoped. An electoral system that had delivered a Labour landslide on just a third of the vote could not do so with the party dramatically less popular than a year earlier. There was no "coming-through-the-middle" for Labour; indeed, there was virtually no middle left in most counties.

Reform wins 'beginning of end for Tories', says Farage

Peter Walker

Nigel Farage claimed yesterday that he had broken the grip of Britain's two main parties, after Reform UK gained an MP and swept to a string of victories in England's local elections, making deep inroads into Labour and Conservative heartlands.

On a sobering day for Keir Starmer and Kemi Badenoch that brought immediate recriminations, the hard-right populist party took hundreds of councillors from the Tories, and won the Runcorn and Helsby byelection with just six votes more than Labour.

In further signs of fracturing political loyalties, a BBC projection of how the voting would have looked in a UK-wide election put Reform first on 30%, with Labour at 20%, the Liberal Democrats on 17%, the Conservatives fourth with 15% and the Greens on 11%.

An increasingly jubilant Farage said his party had now supplanted the Conservatives, as he pledged that Reform-run councils and mayoralties would block asylum seeker accommodation and, in a direct echo of Donald Trump, dismantle equalities programmes.

"We've dug very deep into the Labour vote, and in other parts of England we've dug deep into the Conservative vote, and we are now, after tonight there's no question, in most of the country, we are now the main opposition party to this government," Farage said.

Speaking at a later rally, he said the elections marked "the beginning of the end of the Conservative party".

Reform won in Runcorn and Helsby with a 17-point swing away from Labour, overturning a majority of more than 14,000. The former Conservative minister Andrea Jenkyns easily won the new mayoralty of Greater Lincolnshire for Farage's party, which also took the mayoralty in Hull and East Yorkshire.

By late yesterday, Reform had taken control of 8

Farage hails Reform's poll wins as 'a historic landmark'

The boss, as aides call him, was on his way. It was 2.30am and Nigel Farage had arrived at a Cheshire leisure centre, ready to declare victory in the closely fought Runcorn and Helsby byelection.

But as camera crews gathered, Reform UK officials who were ready to welcome their leader frantically scrambled back to the ballot boxes. The result, it seemed, was too close to call.

It would be another three hours before Farage sauntered into the DCBL Stadium, looking relaxed despite the knife-edge contest that had left his sleep-deprived aides looking increasingly frazzled.

The 61-year-old laughed off claims he had spent daybreak touring Widnes after aborting his earlier grand entrance. He had, he said, been "having a quiet drink". By 6am, it was time to toast victory.

"It's a very, very big moment, absolutely no question," said Farage, as his party took one of Labour's safest seats by just six votes following a dramatic recount. It was the narrowest parliamentary byelection win this century.

As Farage's aides celebrated in the stadium car park – one puffing on a large cigar – the leader planned a victory lap of England. His once-fringe party was now centre stage, gaining a fifth MP, hundreds of council seats, a regional mayor and at least seven county councils from Durham to Staffordshire and Lincolnshire. He had decimated Kemi Badenoch's Conservatives and dealt a damaging blow to Labour.

On the southern banks of the river Mersey in Cheshire, from the post-industrial town of Runcorn to the Conservative villages around Frodsham, Reform UK had united an uneasy coalition of voters against Labour.

One party activist described its supporters as "those who set their alarm for work in the morning and are angry at those who don't – and those who don't". Labour, meanwhile, had relied on those who despise Farage – and they span all political shades – but it was not enough to save their 14,700-vote majority. Many voted Reform UK as a protest against the government. Others expressed their displeasure more creatively.

"I've never seen so many drawings of penises," said one seasoned Labour campaigner after examining spoiled ballot papers.

The discontent was palpable yesterday in Murdishaw, a 1970s housing estate in Runcorn where barely one in four voted in Thursday's contest – the lowest

Farage the eternal opportunist now has a new challenge – to deliver on all the talk

Nigel Farage is one of this century's survivors. A man who walked away not just from a plane crash but any number of iterations of parties carved in his image. In Reform, Nige has found his most successful reinvention yet. You've got a grievance? Then Farage is there to verbalise it and sell it back to you. The politics of the far right may be his preferred habitat but he's nothing if not the consummate opportunist.

Sensing he might have maxed out his fanbase among the right, he's happily dipped his toes into the politics of the left, championing the nationalisation cause. He will be whatever you want him to be. He's not fussy. Anything to ramp Brand Nige.

And now it feels as if his time may have come. Previous triumphs have always felt transitory – ships in the night – but Thursday's local election results have a patina of permanence. A new multiverse where Reform – for now – has the most public support. The more Keir Starmer and Kemi Badenoch try to mirror Nige, the less popular they become.

The danger for Farage is that with success comes obligations. An expectation to deliver. A problem Nige has never encountered before. He'd only ever carped from the sidelines. Trash-talking the governing parties while offering no real solutions himself.

But all this could wait for another day. Yesterday was Nige's personal triumph. His new MP, Sarah Pochin, and Lincolnshire mayor, Andrea Jenkyns, might have been the winners on the night, but everyone knew they were only there out of an act of kindness granted by Farage.

A Tory MP popped up on the radio to say the people really like Kemi Badenoch. How badly would they have done if they had hated her?

This is the fault line that runs through Nige's entire career. Nige is only ever about Nige. His team are primarily followers rather than MPs or mayors. So no surprise that for Reform's victory lap in Durham, it was Farage alone at centre stage.

"We are the agents of change," he said. The royal we. Then he went to his familiar bugbears. Diversity. There was too much of it. Time for middle-aged white men like him to be given a chance. Too many foreigners. He'd make sure there were no asylum seekers in any council Reform controlled. They would be eradicated. As for net zero? Let the planet burn.

Elsewhere, Keir Starmer was at a drone factory in Luton. For him the biggest story of the day was defence manufacturing. It took a while, but eventually a journalist got a word in. What about the elections? Keir looked baffled. He had completely forgotten about them. They were a meaningless distraction.

But the message Keir wanted to take away was what the country really wanted was for him to keep doing exactly what he had been doing. Only doing it faster.

His victorious mayor, Ros Jones, and several MPs from the left of the Labour party saw it differently. They reckoned their traditional voters were sick of a party that was Reform-lite. Why would anyone vote for that when they could have the real thing.

If it was a bad day for Labour, it was a crushing one for the Tories. No wonder then that most of its MPs took a vow of silence. Nigel Huddleston popped up on the radio to say that the message he was hearing from voters was that people really liked Kemi Badenoch. You dread to think how badly the Tories would have done if they had hated her.

Labour and Tories rocked by huge swing to Reform

Farage's right-wingers romp to victory, taking control of five councils from the Conservatives and overturning huge Labour majority to win fifth seat in parliament – as humiliated Tories turn on leader for 'staying out of limelight'

Nigel Farage's Reform UK has made massive gains in local elections across England, with stunning victories that redraw the political map. The populist right-wing party won the Runcorn and Helsby by-election by just six votes following a dramatic recount, overturning a Labour majority of 14,000, and took control of seven councils – including Kent, which has been Tory-run for almost all of its existence. Polling expert Professor Sir John Curtice said the result illustrates that Britain is "no longer a two-party system" but is now a five-party one, with many gains also for the Liberal Democrats and the Greens.

Nigel Farage's Reform UK has made massive gains in the local elections across England in a series of stunning victories that have redrawn the political map.

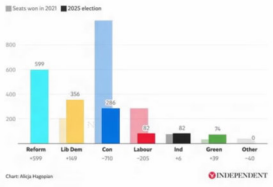

The populist right-wing party won the Runcorn and Helsby by-election in dramatic circumstances with a majority of just six votes following a recount, overturning a Labour majority of 14,000. This preceded a set of local election results that saw their candidate Dame Andrea Jenkyns win as mayor of Greater Lincolnshire, where Reform won a majority of county council seats too. The party also seized majorities in Staffordshire and Durham, inflicting severe pain on both Labour and the Tories.

The row over ousting Great Yarmouth MP Rupert Lowe appeared to be a distant memory for Mr Farage and Reform as the party swept hundreds of seats across England, emerging as the biggest winner in this round of elections. Polling guru Professor Sir John Curtice declared that the result showed British politics is "no longer a two-party system" – this having been replaced by a five-party set-up, with the Liberal Democrats and Greens also making gains.

The Tories and Labour both look set to sustain significant losses.

The results could raise serious questions over Kemi Badenoch's leadership if the Conservative Party is left with no real heartlands in the UK, with senior Tories already plotting to oust her. A rare bright spot for the party came as Paul Bristow was declared the narrow winner of the Cambridgeshire and Peterborough mayoralty, taking 28 per cent of the vote and beating the Reform candidate Ryan Coogan, who took 23 per cent, into second place.

The results also unleashed almost 10 months' worth of pent-up frustration among senior Labour figures with prime minister Sir Keir Starmer, who has been blamed for the party's disastrous showing in Thursday's elections.

Council seats after Thursday's election (some results yet to be declared) compared to the 2021 result (Alicja Hagopian)

Mr Farage's party also won the mayoral race in Hull and East Yorkshire, with former Olympic boxer Luke Campbell winning the ballot as part of what appeared to be a seismic shift in voting across Britain. However, with turnouts often at less than 30 per cent, opponents of Reform were able to cling on to hope that disillusionment and apathy had opened the door for Mr Farage's party, and that the outcome would be different in a general election.

Nevertheless, a jubilant Mr Farage said: "For the movement, for the party, it's a very, very big moment indeed, absolutely, no question, and it's happening right across England." He said it was a sign that Sir Keir had "alienated so much of his traditional base, it's just extraordinary".

However, Labour said that by-elections are "always difficult for the party in government". They said the events surrounding the Runcorn and Helsby vote – the resignation of former Labour MP Mike Amesbury after his conviction for assaulting a constituent – had made it "even harder".

The prime minister himself attempted to avoid questions on the local elections as he visited a defence contractor in Bedfordshire. But asked about the results by Sky News, he said: "The message I take away from these results is we must deliver change even more quickly, we must go even further. I've believed for some time that's the case, and [it's been] reinforced in these results that that's what we've got to do."

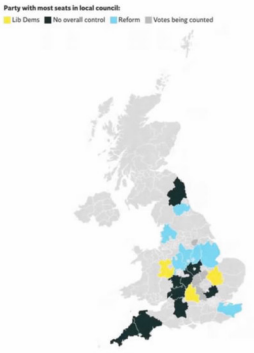

Labour Party chair Ellie Reeves acknowledged that voters are "impatient", but insisted that "change takes time". She suggested Reform would face greater scrutiny after its electoral gains. "We've had to stabilise the economy, but we're starting that work. We've got our Plan for Change, we're beginning to see the results of this, but we know we need to go further and faster," she told Times Radio.

she told Times Radio.

But Doncaster's victorious Labour mayor Ros Jones – who was re-elected with a majority of 698 after a battle with Reform – hit out at the prime minister's administration. She criticised decisions to means-test the winter fuel allowance, hike employers' national insurance contributions and squeeze welfare. Ms Jones told the BBC: "I think the results here tonight will demonstrate that they need to be listening to the man, woman and businesses on the street, and actually deliver for the people, with the people."

Anger over taking the winter fuel payment from 10 million pensioners, slashing benefits for the disabled and hiking taxes on businesses was blamed for the catastrophic results for Labour. Former Labour shadow chancellor John McDonnell – now an independent MP after he was forced out for opposing the two-child benefit cap – described the party's response to the results so far as "tin-eared".

Mr McDonnell said on social media: "Labour supporters feel Labour, their party, has turned its back on them citing Winter Fuel Allowance, NI tax on jobs & threat of disability cuts. Message to ministers is drop the plans to attack [the] disabled."

In her speech after winning Runcorn, Sarah Pochin, a former Conservative councillor, said voters had made clear that "enough is enough". The Tories, meanwhile, were trying to limit the damage, and made it clear they would not be forced into a deal with Reform.

Previously, shadow justice secretary Robert Jenrick, who some believe is angling to be leader, had been recorded saying that a deal was inevitable. But as the results came in, Tory co-chair Nigel Huddleston insisted there could be no deal with a party "whose aim is to destroy the Conservative Party". He went on: "Kemi's position is certainly solid. She's only been leader for six months, and she was out and about right across the country, and I can tell you this: everywhere we went, people wanted to see her more and hear more from her."

Meanwhile, Ms Badenoch has tried to play down the electoral catastrophe for her party as it lost hundreds of seats and now faces the onward march of Reform. In a statement, she said: "These were always going to be a very difficult set of elections, coming off the high of 2021 and our historic defeat last year – and so it's proving. The renewal of our party has only just begun, and I'm determined to win back the trust of the public and the seats we've lost, in the years to come."

The Lib Dems made gains but failed in their bid to win Devon County Council, although they displaced the Tories there as the biggest party. Lib Dem leader Sir Ed Davey said: "Last year, the Liberal Democrats won a record number of MPs and became the largest third party in 100 years. Now we are on course for our seventh year of local election gains, making this our best ever winning streak."

A bad night for Labour but even worse for the Tories

Farage's success was humiliating for the PM but ultimately more threatening to Kemi Badenoch, writes John Rentoul

While the Conservative Party will take years to recover from its own disfavour, Nigel Farage will conquer all in the meantime (Reuters)

It shouldn't make a difference to assessing Reform's performance whether it won the Runcorn by-election by six votes or lost by six, but in practice, it makes all the difference in the world.

It confirms that a government that is still new is so deeply unpopular that it cannot hold one of its safest seats. A landslide general election win that matched the giddiness of Blairphoria just 10 months ago has turned into the humiliation of defeat at the hands of Nigel Farage.

It confirms that Morgan McSweeney, Sir Keir Starmer's chief of staff and architect of his general election victory, is right to see Farage as the main threat to the Labour government – but it also shows how ineffective Labour's attempt to fight Reform on the issue of immigration has been.

If Reform won Runcorn by the narrowest of margins, Labour held onto the mayoralties of the West of England, Doncaster, and North Tyneside by narrow margins too – in each case being lucky to fend off Reform's challenge. Win or lose, in each case, Reform was the threat.

But if Labour did badly on Thursday, the Conservatives did worse, and if Labour faces a continuing challenge from Reform between now and the next general election, the Tories face something more frightening: a total eclipse.

Labour is not in the worst position to fight a national election. It holds the levers of power and can use them to try to deliver at least some tangible benefits for its voters who might be tempted to defect. Bridget Phillipson, the cabinet minister fielded by Labour to make its case overnight, said that she understood how "impatient" people are to see the government deliver the change that it had promised.

For the Tories, on the other hand, Thursday's elections were more ominous. The party was nowhere in the by-election (its candidate came third, level with the Greens); it was outpolled by Reform in all the mayoral contests declared so far; and it is losing local council seats to Reform hand over fist.

> It was striking that Starmer himself failed to visit Runcorn for the by-election campaign, possibly because Labour realised that its leader is a liability

For Kemi Badenoch, Labour's unpopularity has come too soon, because her party will take years to recover from its own disfavour that led to its worst-ever general election result last year – and in the meantime, Farage will conquer all.

Farage may be dismissed as a maverick, a loner and fundamentally unserious, but he is an outsider with a simple message that the Tories cannot match. Every Tory attack on the government can be deflected by asking what they did about it when they were in office just 10 months ago. Baggage-free Farage, on the other hand, can come up with the most outlandish nonsense and disaffected voters will say that he cannot be worse than the two established parties (oh, yes – he can).

I assume that Labour's attack on him for wanting to break up the NHS is achieving some cut-through, as the party seems to be focusing on that – and was helped by Farage on polling day saying that he didn't think the NHS should be funded from taxation. It is notable that Labour doesn't call the party "far right" any more, realising that its voters don't like it; and it was striking that Starmer himself failed to visit Runcorn for the by-election campaign, possibly because Labour realised that its leader is a liability.

All the same, there will always be a market in a general election for sanity and stability; there will be a Labour base that will vote for Starmer, however uninspiring he seems. Badenoch has much less of a base to fall back on.

Thursday's contests were a battle between Labour and Reform. The Lib Dems and the Greens did their things on the margins. But the Tories won absolutely nothing. It is no use their pointing out that 2021 was a good year for the vaccines. They risk being replaced as the main party of opposition by Reform.

As Sam Freedman, a former special adviser to Michael Gove, commented: "As the years go by, it does look more and more like the main long-term political consequence of Brexit will be to kill the Conservative Party." There was nothing in yesterday's votes to contradict him.

Labour must find a way to earn back voters' trust

How should what we used to call "the two big parties" respond to their mauling at the hands of Nigel Farage and Reform UK?

For the Labour Party, the sheer scale of the populists' advance into their traditional areas is a relatively novel phenomenon – if not a shock – and one that the party leadership plainly hadn't spent much time preparing for by the time these elections came around.

The assumption following the general election, one that was well founded by the psephological evidence, was that Mr Farage took far more votes from Conservative and former Conservative supporters than from Labour ones, but that has been changing visibly in the opinion polls this year.

The shift was not taken sufficiently seriously by Sir Keir Starmer and his colleagues until late in the Runcorn by-election campaign, at which point resources were poured in. As the tight result – a majority of six for the new Reform MP – showed, it was too little and far too late, and the swing, of 17 per cent away from the government, is proof of the genuine dissatisfaction with the Starmer administration.

Results in other contests, notably the now wafer-thin majorities enjoyed by Labour mayors, confirmed the slump in popularity and a deep sense of disappointment in the country at large.

The good news for Labour is that it is in power, and is thus in a strong position to frame its own destiny. Sir Keir, Angela Rayner, Rachel Reeves and their colleagues have the entire machinery of government and a huge parliamentary majority at their disposal.

They have money, albeit not as much as they would wish. They promised "change"; they have ample opportunity to achieve this. If the voters are impatient for things to "only get better", as the campaign theme song insisted, then Labour's task, and its new slogan, should be clear and simple – "delivery, delivery, delivery".

The focus groups, the opinion polls and these election results carry a clear message – the British feel that Britain is broken. That was a slogan used by Labour last year, and it has now been appropriated to devastating effect by Reform.

Voters need to see, and feel, evidence that the country is being fixed. If the electorate can personally experience the benefits of this Labour government, it will reward the party with renewed support. The protest votes will be unnecessary if growth picks up, inflation remains more subdued, interest rates come down, and there is more of that elusive "feelgood" factor around.

That means being able to access GP appointments and emergency care promptly; rising standards in schools; the cost of living crisis easing; green energy that is genuinely economical and gets people's bills down; the Channel migrant crisis finally being dealt with, and those arriving being processed swiftly and not being accommodated indefinitely in hotels; affordable homes and rent; and a welfare system that is fair.

Labour, in other words, needs to compromise with the electorate. If she can find a way to do so, the chancellor should reverse the deeply unpopular cuts to the pensioners' winter fuel allowance, ease the burdens on business, including the disincentives to hiring contained in the Employment Rights Bill, and adjust inheritance tax on agricultural land to protect family farms. Pragmatic, practical moves can be taken to restore the trust many have lost in the government.

As for the Conservatives, Kemi Badenoch is in a far weaker position – and much of that is no fault of her own. Out of power, all she can do is make speeches, hold ministers to account, and reshuffle the meagre talent available on the Tory benches.

After dealing them such a historic defeat last year – the aftershocks of which are still being felt in these election results – voters are not yet ready to give the Tories a hearing. The resentments and the sense of betrayal that built up over 14 years of Tory rule are too deeply felt for the party to be forgiven in a matter of months. But the situation, though obviously dire, is not hopeless.

As Ms Badenoch says, there's little point in coming up with random policies that are not properly thought through, and without a plan to implement them. Her instincts there are sound. When the Conservatives have been flattened in the past – such as in similarly historic defeats in 1945 and 1966 – they staged policy-led recoveries that returned them to power more or less within a single parliament. Indeed, Sir Keir's restoration job on the Labour Party after its own debacle in 2019 is a more recent reminder that it can be done.

The very volatility of the electorate, the unpopularity of the government, and the flakiness of the Reform offering should give some comfort to Conservatives that they can come back – but they never will if they choose to try to outflank Mr Farage in his extremism. If she avoids lurching further to the right, then Ms Badenoch has at least a chance of attracting back One Nation pro-European Tories lost to Labour and the Liberal Democrats.

Neither Sir Keir nor Ms Badenoch will find much to be cheerful about in these results, but there is no cause for panic or despair. Reform UK remains a dangerous personality cult with no policies, and is eminently beatable. For the sake of the country, the other parties, including the Liberal Democrats and the Greens, need to do a much better job of exposing Reform for who they really are.

The opera-singing Miss UK finalist turned radical mayor

Reform's latest success story Andrea Jenkyns has had a career of controversy and drama like few others, says David Maddox

The relationship between Greater Lincolnshire's new mayor and Reform has run hot and cold. Ahead of the 2024 election, she accused the party of trying to bribe her to defect (PA)

Just a week ago, Dame Andrea Jenkyns still did not know whether she would be ruled eligible to stand to be mayor of Greater Lincolnshire.

Now, with the question marks over her residency status still hanging over her, the former Tory MP turned Reform defector is suggesting putting migrants in tents and stopping energy secretary Ed Miliband covering East Anglia's fields with solar panels.

Granted, the events of the last seven days are not unusual for a right-wing politician who has courted controversy in a headstrong political career that has given her opponents plenty of ammunition.

Whether it is flipping the bird at protesters outside Downing Street while going in to mark Boris Johnson's departure as prime minister, or ending the political career of Ed Balls, Dame Andrea has never been far from the drama.

Jenkyns arrives at the count on Thursday (PA)

The beauty queen

It all started when 16-year-old Andrea Jenkyns left school in Beverly, Humberside, after her GCSEs and got herself a job serving pasties and sausage rolls at Greggs.

At 18, though, her father persuaded her to start competing in beauty pageants, and her public career really began on the Miss UK stage, where she was a finalist.

The desire to perform has never left her, even beyond politics. Many years later, as a good soprano, she would release an album and perform live in the UK, Europe and Asia, including for the former prime minister of Pakistan.

Ed Balls reacts after losing his Morley and Outwood seat to Jenkyns at the 2015 general election (Reuters)

Defeating Ed Balls

Her political career could not have begun in a more spectacular fashion in 2015. Having been a county councillor in Boston, Lincolnshire, Dame Andrea was asked to run against former Labour cabinet minister Ed Balls in the Morley and Outwood seat on the edge of Leeds.

Mr Balls clearly thought he had the seat in the bag and instead focused on campaigning to oust the then Lib Dem leader Nick Clegg in nearby Sheffield.

It came as a shock to everyone when, in the early hours of the morning on 7 May, Jenkyns was declared the winner. In effect, it ended the political career of a man who had been expected to challenge for the Labour leadership.

The hardcore Brexiteer

Once in parliament, it became clear that Jenkyns was firmly on the right of the Tory party. She quickly joined the European Research Group of hardcore Brexiteers and became a big cheerleader for Boris Johnson.

After the 2016 EU referendum, she pushed for a no-deal Brexit and in 2018, she became the first person with a government position to quit her job in Theresa May's premiership in protest over trying to compromise with the EU.

Such was her strong support for Brexit that the millionaire Nigel Farage ally Arron Banks gave £2,000 for her 2019 election campaign, in a much-criticised move. Jenkyns was accused of trying to help entryism into the Conservatives.

Flipping the bird

Almost all of her nine-year parliamentary career was spent on the backbenches with little appetite to trust her with a ministerial job.

But as dozens of ministers quit Boris Johnson's government in protest over Partygate lockdown boozing in Downing Street and the Chris Pincher scandal, Jenkyns was appointed a junior education minister.

Always a fan of Johnson, on the day he departed as prime minister, she became the image of Tory contempt when she was pictured flipping the bird at protesters on her way into Downing Street to hear his farewell speech.

Mr Johnson was grateful, though, making sure she got her damehood in his resignation honours list.

Jack Lopresti fell for, married and divorced Jenkyns (UK Parliament)

Finding love in the Commons

While Boris Johnson was her leadership love in politics, Dame Andrea had also found love with one of her colleagues, Jack Lopresti, who fell for her despite being on the moderate One Nation side of the Tories.

Lopresti left his family for her, and they had a son in 2017, marrying in December that year.

But things fell apart quite quickly: in 2024, she announced they had divorced.

Lopresti was last heard of joining the Ukrainian army to help in the war against Russia, having also lost his seat in the election last year.

Off and then on with Reform

Dame Andrea's relationship with Reform has been typically hot and cold. Ahead of the 2024 election, she accused Reform of trying to bribe her to defect to it. She then had a bitter feud with party leader Richard Tice after she was deliberately targeted by Reform to lose her Morley and Leeds South West seat, which she duly did.

The animosity did not stop her from turning up as a guest at Nigel Farage's 60th birthday party ahead of the election last year in what was seen as a sign that she would eventually switch. She was pictured with Farage and Arron Banks.

Then, as a seatless ex-Tory MP, she became Reform's 100,000th member and was declared as the mayoral candidate for Greater Lincolnshire – the county where her political career began as a councillor in Boston.

But even then, things were not settled between her and Reform. Dame Andrea's public support for Boris Johnson on X (formerly Twitter) upset party chairman Zia Yusuf, who then suddenly started doing interviews on how the ex-Tory PM would never be welcome in Reform.

Victory in Lincolnshire

Dame Andrea's first reaction on winning was to complain about the "smear campaign" against her by her opponents. Having picked up 42 per cent of the vote, she was more concerned about the questions which had been asked about whether she was eligible to stand.

While she was cleared by the returning officer to stand as a candidate, there is a possibility that her vague residency qualifications could become the subject of another legal challenge.

Now she has won, though, and is backed by a likely Reform majority on the county council, the sleepy East Midlands county could become a real testbed for Reform right-wing policies.

Already, she is discussing putting illegal migrants in tents. She is also likely to try to stop renewable energy sources, be it wind or solar farms, from being allowed in the county.

More interesting will be the Lincolnshire version of Doge in slashing costs and cutting services, an ambition of Farage's.

Lincolnshire's farmers and fishing communities may be worried about having a vegetarian animal rights activist in charge.

But overall, Lincolnshire will now be the real test of whether Reform is a party fit to govern. And Dame Andrea will become the face of that.

Table 1: votes won in 2025 with vote share change from 2021 (like-for-like results from that year only)

Because Reform did exist in 2021 and stood a handful of candidates that year we can record a swing from the Conservatives: an extraordinary 25.9% comparing just those councils up this year with their 2021 results.

Again, this is unprecedented. The swing to the Alliance in 1982 from the Liberal Party share in 1978 was just nine points: the Alliance still polled in third place in those elections.

Because the particular set of elections this year skewed heavily to the Conservatives - that is, Labour bastions like London, Merseyside, Greater Manchester, Tyneside, South and West Yorkshire, Birmingham and the inner West Midlands, Wales, and Scotland did not hold elections this year while a lot of rural and small town England did, it would not be correct to state that Labour's national share was just 14% and that the Conservatives' was 23%.

To iron out this skew, which is different in each stage of the election cycle depending on which councils are up in that year (2026, for example, when London boroughs and Metropolitan counties vote, should have as pronounced a Labour lean as this years councils have for the Conservatives), psephologists model results to try to come up with a more reliable measure of the share the parties would have won if everywhere had had an election. The one compiled by Professors Colin Rallings and Michael Thrasher: the National Equivalent Vote (NEV) model, projects these vote shares:

	Con	Lab	Ref	LD	Oths
2025	18%	19%	32%	16%
2021	40%	30%		15%
2017	39%	28%		18%
2013	26%	29%		13%	32
2009	35%	22%		25%
2005	33%	36%		23%
1997	31%	44%		17%

Reform gained outright control of ten councils, and got so close to a majority in three others (Leicestershire, Warwickshire and Worcestershire) that it was practically impossible to deny them minority control.

The Lib Dems gained majorities in Cambridgeshire (despite the county's directly-elected mayoralty being gained by the Conservatives from Labour), Oxfordshire and Shropshire, and got so close to a majority as to be able to run Devon, Gloucestershire, Hertfordshire, Wiltshire and Cornwall (the last two in coalition with independents). They won the second-largest number of seats despite finishing fourth in vote share. The Lib Dems only added 1.5% to their 2021 vote share but because they principally oppose the Tories in these counties, and that party endured a calamitous 25-point crash in support, that still represented an 11% Conservative to Lib Dem swing.

The Conservatives lost their majority in every council they defended but had two very small crumbs of consolation. First, they gained the Cambridgeshire regional mayoralty (which includes Peterborough) after the voting system was changed to First Past The Post. The Tories would also have won Cambridgeshire in 2021 given how far ahead they finished in first preference votes that time too. Second, they fell short in Buckinghamshire and Northumberland so narrowly that there was no way the combined other parties could cobble together a majority and so still run, in the minority, those two counties.

That there were four, often five or even six credible contenders in many contests across the country produced a lot more councillors with fairly low winning votes. At the extreme end was this result from Cornwall, a Lib Dem winning with less than 19% of the vote.

Opponents of First Past The Post say results like this are the final nail in the coffin for an electoral system devised when there were two dominant political parties, fancifully overlooking that in most PR systems, candidates receive far lower first preference shares. You need to talk yourself into the belief that second and subsequent preferences somehow confer legitimacy on a candidate who only 19% of the electorate chose initially to justify your chosen proportional system.

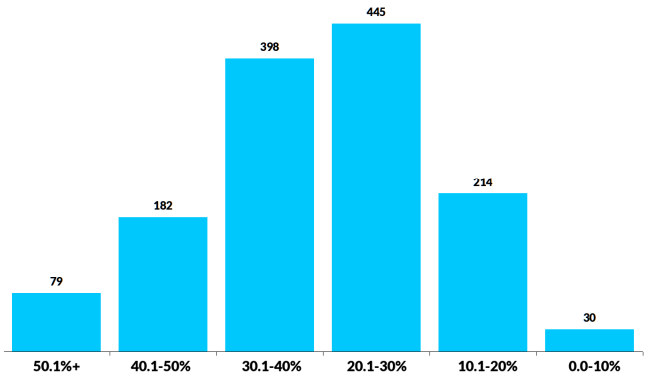

Only if you sincerely believe that the 81.1% that didn't vote Lib Dem in Truro Moresk, above, are the least bit aggrieved - let alone that it is an unconscionable violation of their human rights - at who now represents them can you truly convince yourself that our electoral system is one of the biggest issues of social injustice in the UK.

I suspect the PR advocates would be much more offended had not a candidate of one of the so-called progressive parties won here: because the cause of PR rests not on what is claimed for it: fairness, but ensuring that supporters of the assorted left-of-centre parties can swap votes until one of them emerges ahead of a conservative candidate through whatever opaque algorithm, far removed from the voters, can be devised to deliver that outcome.

Seats won by party in the county councils - 1985 to 2025

It took 1,954 votes to elect a Reform councillor, 2,066 to elect a Conservative, 1,083 to elect a Lib Dem and 780 to elect a Labour councillor in these elections (that is: divide the party's vote by the number of its councillors elected). This another metric supporters of Proportional Representation use to supposedly highlight how many fewer votes (typically) Conservatives needed to win to get elected compared to (typically) Liberal Democrats. But if anything the electoral system is now discriminating against the Conservatives, while Labour and Lib Dems, with their very demographic concentrated in specific, if relatively few, seats, benefit the most.

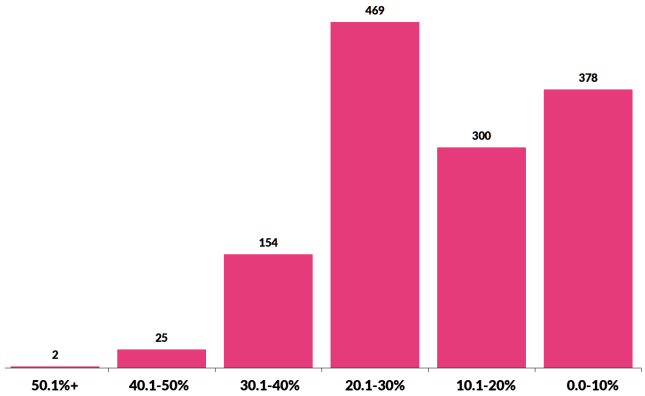

Number of divisions Reform won in 2025 by percentage vote, per decile

It seems almost churlish to raise any questions about the success of Reform given their breakthrough triumph. Yet despite this, their crucial weakness remains that, unlike Labour and the Lib Dems, they do not have geographic concentrations of support: theirs is very much more even across the bulk of the country. That 30% vote share is enough to win when the main parties are deeply unpopular, but if either Labour or the Conservatives recover to any consequential degree it would not take much for the electoral system to tilt away from them again - for them to win significant shares of the vote but harvest relatively few wins from it.

This table shows the decile band Reform polled in each ward/division this year (this is all of them, not just the seats they won). Reform polling above 40% and below 20% is very rare: the bulk of the country awarded them a share between those two markers.

The Reform spread, as it were, is somewhat different to that of UKIP back in 2013, though perhaps not as much as you might imagine. Obviously there were a lot more seats UKIP did not contest (these are included in the 0-10 decile) and the big difference is Reform's strength in the north, which UKIP lacked.

These elections were record-breaking for the Conservatives, and not in a good way.

Conservatives

From being the overwhelmingly dominant party of the counties, the Tories now have the sorts of feeble councillor numbers Labour has endured since 2009. Never before has a party collapsed by as much as twenty one percentage points. Even in 1995, the round of council elections that put beyond any doubt that John Major's Conservatives were heading for a landslide election defeat, the Tory vote only fell ten points from 1991 (35%-21%). In fact 1996 was a more precipitate drop in Tory support because they triumphed in 1992 when the local elections came a month after Major's surprise general election win. Back then they fell from 46% to 29%: still nowhere near as bad as their 2025 implosion. What Kemi Badenoch would give for a 29% vote share today.

As in the general election, voters still determined which party was most likely to oust the Conservative incumbent: Lib Dems in southern, generally Remain-supporting counties and Reform everywhere else. Very few people cast a Labour vote to beat a Tory; only 13% of the voter pool voted Labour for any reason whatsoever.

There are only two points of hope the Conservatives can cling to following these elections. The first is that they are no longer in power, at any level, anywhere in the United Kingdom. That may sound like an odd silver lining given parties exist to win power, but it means that a line should now start to be drawn in voters' minds between the toxic legacy of the Conservative decade-plus in power, and politics going forward.

That doesn't mean a clean slate or everything forgiven or forgotten: far from it: it's just that this process might now start. Reform, in contrast, now runs the most important services local government provides, in thirteen counties, while Labour seems thoroughly surprised that things haven't transformed for the better simply because they, not the "evil" Conservatives, are in power.

While Labour has simply replaced the Tories in Reform's narrative that these parties are two sides of the same failing, elitist coin, and have plenty yet to milk from what they perceive as Labour's terrible misgovernance, unless they start delivering unequivocally better services, or unequivocally lower Council Tax, or both, Reform will inevitably begin suffering from the burden being the decision-makers brings with it. So, in theory and by precedent, the Conservatives may actually benefit by being largely irrelevant. But only for a short period: irrelevance is not something any party other than the Liberal Democrats can survive for long.

The second sliver, and again it is a very fine sliver, is that 2025 erased the last set of exceedingly good local election results for the Tories. 2022 was fairly poor, comprising very bad London local election results for the Conservatives and pretty bad results in the rest of the country: they played a major part in ousting Boris Johnson later that summer. 2023 and 2024 were truly dismal election cycles for the Conservatives.

Again, why is it a good thing that Conservatives have been absolutely smashed in four successive rounds of local elections?
It is because it should mean that they have now hit rock bottom. When you're at the very bottom there are only two ways to go: stay where you are or improve.

That may not quite be true because, while the Conservatives are at an unprecedentedly low ebb in London, the outer rim of the capital was not quite so disastrous for the party and, in 2026, they will face a serious challenge, especially in boroughs like Bexley, Bromley and Hillingdon which they still control, from Reform. But still, there are opportunities for the Conservatives to improve in London and, if they can pull off the same spin Labour achieved in 2022, when their three big gains: Barnet, Wandsworth and Westminster, declared early and got all the media attention, they may well look like they're climbing out of their crater even if they're not.

Labour

Labour has cause to need counselling every time the county councils come up for election.

The county councils have always been problematic for Labour, especially since small cities and large towns began being removed to become their own unitary councils. But in recent years, irrespective of the party being in government or opposition, they have become an absolute nightmare for them. And this has fairly little to do with their best urban areas being removed from the counties: it's about the long-term realignment of the country that the 2016 EU referendum exposed but which was occurring long before and since.

Simply put: urban areas, the larger the better, became very much stronger for Labour while rural areas, medium and small towns became much stronger for the Conservatives, regardless of their history of voting Labour.

This table shows the number of Labour councillors returned at each election since 1993 from the relatively few counties in which Labour has traditionally been strong - in all cases bar Hertfordshire and Kent, counties with a strong mining tradition and where the party could often win a majority.

	25	21	17	13	09	05	01	97	93

Staffs	1	4	10	24	3	32	36	40	53

Number of Labour councillors in counties the party is traditionally strong, 1993-2025

There are reasons this matters disproportionately to Labour, principally because Labour is an activist party: its (sole) massive advantage over the Conservatives has been its "ground game": the ability to turn out huge hordes of activists to canvass, and survey and host street stalls - simply to have an enduring presence in a neighbourhood. Of course one doesn't need to be a councillor to be an activist - but it helps because most representatives are more motivated to get out and try to hold together the votes that elected them. All of a sudden - for the first time ever - there are no Labour councillors in swathes of red wall constituencies in Durham and Northumberland and Nottinghamshire, Lancashire and Derbyshire. This is a problem - not an insurmountable one, but a problem nonetheless, especially when Labour shows no sign of being able to turn things around.

Liberal Democrats

The Lib Dems repeated their 2024 general election performance, strong in the areas they were strong in last year, and weak everywhere else. This was even true within the counties they did well in - for example all the Lib Dem seats in Cambridgeshire are in the southern half of the county around Cambridge; the north around Peterborough voted Conservative or Reform. The Lib Dem half of Cambridgeshire voted strongly Remain; the non-Lib Dem half voted strongly Leave. In an era prior to the EU referendum the Lib Dems would have been competitive across the whole county: North East Cambridgeshire, for example, was represented by the Liberal Clement Freud, for several elections. No longer.

Likewise, the Lib Dems may well have won an overall majority in Gloucestershire had they been able to make inroads into the Forest of Dean district: the most strongly Leave part of the county. Instead it was Reform that surged here.

Nonetheless, the Lib Dems are now firmly established in small-L more liberal sections of the country which usually contentedly voted Conservative until the end of the Cameron era, and which have since swung far away from the Tories as they started chasing less affluent, socially conservative Leave votes.

Some Liberal Democrats argue that they have a far better record of rebuffing the Reform surge - and indeed they have been holding onto seats in areas they performed strongly in at the last general election; both in these local elections and local by-elections since May.

But this is a case of post hoc ergo propter hoc: because they are holding onto seats while those all around them are losing theirs, they are uniquely equipped to defeat Reform: the only party capable of preventing Nigel Farage reaching No.10. But that's not right. If it were, why can they only hold off Reform in areas with a demographic profile that leans liberal, progressive, internationalist?

Rather, places that are inclined to elect Liberal Democrats in this post-Brexit era are places that strongly disinclined to elect Reform - even more so than they are Conservatives, though there's little in it. If Labour gets wiped out nationwide everywhere apart from Liverpool, say, this is not because Liverpool Labour is uniquely masterful at winning elections but rather that this city's self image is so intrinsically linked to Labour nowadays that it will be the last place that abandons the party.

Reform managed to only win one seat in Oxfordshire, not because voters everywhere except Didcot carefully weighed up the pros and cons of each party standing in their area and went with the Lib Dems because they delivered the largest tonnage of leaflets through their doors but because affluent, heavily Remain, liberal Oxfordshire is terribly infertile territory for a populist party of the right.

Yes, the Lib Dems won the 370 councillors this year - their highest number since 2009: the year before they joined David Cameron's coalition government and paid a heavy electoral price. But their vote share of 17% is still seven to ten points below what they consistently won in local elections prior to 2010. And 370 councillors compares unfavourably to every set of seats they won at this stage of the electoral cycle prior to 2010. In 1993, there were 833 Lib Dem councillors elected in the county council elections, albeit caveated that there were hundreds more seats up for election that year.

So the Lib Dems are doing as well as they can (which is very well) within a political environment that has boxed-in their opportunities and shows no sign of opening wider for them. Still need convincing? How about this chart, showing how the Lib Dems performed in three tranches of local authorities: those which voted Leave by more than 57.5% (strongly Leave), those which voted Leave by between 50.1% and 57.4%; and those which voted Remain:

	Con	Lab	LD	Ref
Strongly Leave	21.8	17.1	9.1	36.5
Leave	24.3	10.8	23.2	27.5
Remain	24.5	12.4	27.4	19.7

For the first time since the referendum there was very little difference in the Conservative vote between Remain and Leave areas - it was decimated everywhere. Likewise, Labour did slightly less badly in strongly Leave areas than Remain areas, but again when their vote is as low as it was in May 2025 this is not spectacular. But look at the Lib Dem performance: just 9% in strongly Leave areas; 27% in Remain areas. And of course that's mirrored for Reform UK: 36.5% in strongly Leave areas; barely half that in Remain areas.

This is not to suggest that membership of the EU remains a particular driver of voting intention: it polls very lowly nowadays among the issues pressing on voters' minds however they voted in 2016. Rather, that 2016 vote epitomises a whole bunch of political preferences that are still incredibly important today, ranging from cultural issues like trans rights and the priority the state should be giving to a Diversity, Equity and Inclusion (DEI) agenda, through to whether immigration has a positive or negative impact on the country; to net zero; to whether the two child benefit cap should be abolished and so on. It is a divide between liberalism and what is often characterised as authoritarianism, but that is not really correct: it is more about how active and benevolent people want the state to be in managing people's lives and their freedoms. It is, simultaneously about an internationalist versus nation-state perspective.

This divide mattered before 2016 and it still matters nearly a decade later. A Liberal Democrat, a Green and occasionally even a Labour candidate will do well in a liberal area. They will struggle in an area that lacks that demographic, however good they are at campaigning.

All that said, the Lib Dems did a far more robust job of defending the areas they gained in 2025 than Labour managed - though of course the Lib Dems are no longer in power and are inoculated from the unpopularity having to make choices generates.

This table shows the vote shares each party won in constituencies that Labour held in 2025; gained at that general election; that the Lib Dems held or gained; and which the Conservatives held.

	Con	Lab	LD	Ref
Labour-held (18)	10.0	17.8	14.8	17.5
Labour gained (67)	21.9	18.1	11.0	33.8
LD held/gained (23)	22.6	5.4	37.3	21.7
Con-held (47)	29.2	8.7	17.7	30.4

It illustrates why Labour made no headway in divisions and wards within constituencies the party gained at the general election. Not only did Labour's derisory 18.1% trail the Conservatives' 21.9% but they were both thrashed by Reform, which took 33.8%. In contrast, the Lib Dems comfortably came out on top in those wards and divisions within constituencies they either held or gained last year: 37.3% to 22.6% for the Conservatives and 21.7% for Reform.

The Green Party

Earlier I mentioned the debate within the Greens about how to position themselves now a left-of-centre party was in power. If results from this year's council elections influence that debate they would show that the Green path lies through what are currently Labour-held, not Conservative constituencies.

There were nine constituencies in which the Green vote exceeded 20% and all bar one of these are currently represented by Labour:

Constituency	Green %
Worcester	30.7%
Tonbridge	30.1%
Stroud	29.2%
Kettering	28.8%
Warwick and Leamington	26.9%
Cambridge	25.2%
Exeter	23.3%
Hertford and Stortford	22.9%
Forest of Dean	21.3%

These are an eclectic mix of constituencies: some long-term Labour held (Cambridge, Exeter), some long-term marginals (Worcester, Stroud); some usually Conservative which Labour gained in 2025 (Kettering, Hertford & Stortford). Worcester is the only seat with a large ethnically diverse population; Exeter, Warwick & Leamington, and Cambridge have a large student electorate. Significant and relatively recent Green strength in the town of Tonbridge itself accounts for that one featuring on the list: Tom Tugendhat won with a majority of over 11,000 with the Greens third at the general election, so despite their strong vote share here it is going to prove quite hard to convert council votes into a parliamentary challenge.

The mayoral contests

In addition to the council elections, four regional mayors, and two directly-elected council mayors, for Doncaster and North Tyneside, were up for election this year. Of the four regional mayoralties we have already discussed the Conservative regain of Cambridgeshire and Peterborough.

Labour clung narrowly on to the West of England mayoralty with a surprisingly (given the demographic of Bristol) strong Reform showing, despite very serious criminal charges being levelled at outgoing mayor Dan Norris, now MP for Jacob Rees-Mogg's former constituency. Aaron Banks, a self-proclaimed "Bad Boy of Brexit" was narrowly defeated by Reform convincingly won the two new regional mayoralties of Hull and East Yorkshire and "Greater" Lincolnshire. In the former of these 2012 London Olympic Boxing gold medallist Luke Campbell, Hull born and bred, won for Reform while Conservative MP until 2024 Andrea Jenkins won Lincolnshire by a large majority.

Reform came very close to winning the mayoralties of North Tyneside and Doncaster but Labour just clung on in both. In Doncaster Reform won two-thirds of the council seats and so can now veto the mayor's budgets, should they choose. Labour has a large majority on North Tyneside council, which covers Tynemouth, Whitley Bay, Wallsend and some former pit villages around the north-east of Newcastle.

By-elections

There were 106 by-elections in the local authorities that were intended to elect in 2025. The Conservatives sustained significant losses, being defeated in 41 of the 67 seats they defended. This was principally because of their rapid loss of popularity since the 2021 elections and the very high water-mark they had achieved in those elections. The principal beneficiaries were the Liberal Democrats, who gained 25 and lost 2. Labour gained 12 and lost none, the Greens gained 7 (also losing nil), while independent candidates gained three but also lost three. Reform gained one - but contested barely any of the by-elections.
